and permitted to act as such on the minor's behalf (1) These provisions have been taken from the Original Side rules (2) The same reasons which require the representation of an infant plaintiff (3) apply to the case of an infant defendant A minor may appear by attorney or pleader, but he can only plead or conduct the defence by his guardian (4) As to the age of majority, see notes to r 1, ante A guardian ad litem is not within the scope of sect 3 of the Majority Act (5) The rule assumes that there is a suit which may and indeed must be instituted of the plaintiff

Upon the institution of a suit against an infant the question of service of summons is one of some difficulty There are no special provisions as to the service of summons upon infants, and therefore the same rules appear to apply as in the case of adults (7) Summons should be issued and served on the minor defendant Where there has been neither personal nor substituted service on the minor defendant or on the certificated guardian, and an ex parte decree has been passed, it will be set aside under sect 108 (now O IX r 13) (8) Where, however, it was not definitely shown that any attempt was made to serve the summons upon the infants personally, or upon their mother before serving it upon the only adult male member and karta of the family, but it was not shown that the alleged irregularity had caused any prejudice, it was held to be cured by sect 578 (now sect 99) (9)

Subsequent to the issue of summons, the Court must proceed under this rule to satisfy itself of the fact of minority (10) Where no guardian ad litem is appointed (mere notice of a proposal to appoint a person being insufficient) and an ex parte decree is passed, it will be set aside (11) And where it is so satisfied the Court should proceed to the appointment of a guardian It is the duty of the Court to see that a minor's interests are properly represented (12) The provisions of the rule are mandatory and should be strictly followed (13)

No order appointing a guardian should be made ex parte, so that opportunity may be given for the making of an application on behalf of the infant under r 3, though the fact that an order appointing a guardian at the instance of the plaintiff is made ex parte is not necessarily fatal to the suit (1) If the minor or his friends and relatives in whose care he may be, fail to move the Court to appoint a guardian then the appointment may be made at the instance of the plaintiff (2) The appointment is made by the Court and not by the parties, though it is on their application, (3) and by the Court in which the litigation is pending (4) The appointment of a guardian ad litem under this rule is wholly distinct from the appointment of a guardian under the Guardian and Wards Act (5) The Code expressly requires the appointment of a guardian ad litem whether or not a guardian is appointed under Act VIII of 1890, although that Act gives precedence (r 4, clause 2) to a guardian appointed under its provisions (6) Though advisable it is not necessary that there should be a formal order of appointment if it appears on the face of the proceedings that the Court has sanctioned the appointment (7)

As to who may be appointed see r 4 Sub rule (2) of that rule gives precedence (8) to guardians of the person or property unless special reasons exist against their appointment So while there is nothing to prevent a guardian suing her ward, in such a case the minor must be represented by some other person whose interest is not adverse to him (9) Where a guardian filed a written statement which was prejudicial to the interests of the minor the Court observed that in a suit in which it is not necessary for a minor defendant to take an active part, no guardian is ever justified in taking any step prejudicial to his ward If he can do nothing positively for the minor's benefit he ought simply to leave the matter to the Court (10) A father cannot act as guardian ad litem of his son when there is a clear conflict of interest between them Thus where a father, professing to act as the head of a Mital-dara family executed a deed of the family joint property it was not open to him to impugn its validity

it would be the duty of the guardian ad litem of the infant son to urge as a defence that the mortgage was beyond the scope of the father's authority, and it was therefore held that the father could not be the guardian ad litem (1). Where the plaintiff alleges that the defendant is not a minor, and minority is pleaded as a defence to an action, inasmuch as an alleged minor cannot be treated as if he was of full age during the investigations of any material averment in a suit, a guardian should be appointed for the defendant and a preliminary issue should be framed and tried as to whether the defendant is or is not a minor (2). Though by sect 410 of the last Code the next friend of a plaintiff might be made liable for costs there was no similar express provision with respect to a guardian. But according to the English practice, which has been followed by the Bombay High Court, he has been made to pay costs where he has been guilty of gross misconduct in the case, (3) as where a guardian put executors to proof of a will which he wished to upset for his own private purposes, and which the evidence showed was, to his knowledge, duly executed (4). The Madras High Court, in a case (5) which does not appear to have been considered in the one last cited, has held that the Code does not authorize a Court to decree costs against the guardian of a defendant except in the case referred to in sect 458 (now r 11), which deals only with costs when a guardian is removed.

"Shall appoint"—The provisions are imperative, and where they are not substantially complied with the minor is not properly represented, and any decree which may be passed against him is a nullity (6). Thus where a decree had been passed against a minor who was described in the suit as of age, it was held that it was a nullity so far as he was concerned (7). The Court must not only appoint a guardian, but satisfy itself that the proposed guardian is a fit and proper person to represent the minor, to put in a proper defence, and generally to act in the interests of the minor. The duty of the Court is not a mere matter of form (8).

Clause (4).—This is based on sect 443 of the last Code. The Legislature has considered it necessary to ensure that notice should reach one interested in the minor's welfare, and this rule aims at securing this result. It was held that the appointment, apparently by an oversight, as guardian ad litem to a minor defendant of a person other than the certificated guardian, amounted to a no more than an irregularity not vitiating the decree or sale thereunder. See next rule, clause (2) (9).

Petition for guardian ad litem—See ante, where the procedure will be found dealt with. A person cannot be appointed guardian ad litem against his will, and this is now enacted by r 1, (1) but where a guardian ad litem has once been appointed, his appointment endures for the whole of the lis in the course of which it has been made, unless and until it is revoked by the Court, (2) and therefore for purposes of appeal (3). A Court has jurisdiction to try a suit against a minor notwithstanding the appointment of one of its officers (1) to be the minor's guardian ad litem (5).

4 (1) Any person who is of sound mind and has attained majority may act as next friend of a minor or as his guardian for the suit:
 Who may act as next friend or be appointed guardian for the suit

Provided that the interest of such person is not adverse to that of the minor and that he is not, in the case of a next friend, a defendant, or, in the case of a guardian for the suit, a plaintiff.

(2) Where a minor has a guardian appointed or declared by competent authority, no person other than such guardian shall act as the next friend of the minor or be appointed his guardian for the suit unless the Court considers, for reasons to be recorded, that it is for the minor's welfare that another person be permitted to act or be appointed, as the case may be.

(3) No person shall without his consent be appointed guardian for the suit.

(4) Where there is no other person fit and willing to act as guardian for the suit, the Court may appoint any of its officers to be such guardian, and may direct that the costs to be incurred by such officer in the performance of his duties as such guardian shall be borne either by the parties or by any one or more of the parties to the suit, or out of any fund in Court in which the minor is interested, and may give directions for the repayment or allowance of such costs as justice and the circumstances of the case may require.

Who may act—See notes to r 1 ante.

Who may be next friend and guardian—A married woman may be next friend (6) though under the provisions of sect 157 of the last Code, which have not in this respect been re enacted, she could not be appointed guardian ad litem (1) In a suit by minors to obtain a declaration that a decree did not affect them inasmuch as they were not properly represented by their mother, who was incapable of acting as guardian, they were held entitled to a decree (2) Whatever be the propriety of making provision by the appointment of a public officer for the institution of suits on behalf of infants, it is of the utmost importance that no person should be appointed of whom even a suspicion can exist that he may be biased by personal interest The Privy Council therefore disapproved of the appointment of the Registrar, who, according to the practice of the Supreme Court was entitled to a commission of 5 per cent on all sums paid into Court (3) It was held that the Code did not apply to all guardians, for it did not apply to natural guardians See notes to last rule (4)

[s. 441] 5 (1) Every application to the Court on behalf of a minor, other than an application under rule 10, sub Representation of minor by next friend or guardian for the suit rule (2), shall be made by his next friend or by his guardian for the suit

[s. 442] (2) Every order made in a suit or on any application, before the Court in or by which a minor is in any way concerned or affected, without such minor being represented by a next friend or guardian for the suit, as the case may be, may be discharged, and, where the pleader of the party at whose instance such order was obtained knew, or might reasonably have known, the fact of such minority, with costs to be paid by such pleader

Applications to be by representative—The Code no doubt distinguishes between next friends and guardians for the suit, the former term being used in respect of plaintiff minors, and the latter when the minors are defendants But if a guardian ad litem has not been appointed for a defendant a next friend can apply (5)

Order obtained by next friend or guardian—This rule shows that no order by which a minor or lunatic is in any way concerned or affected can legally be made without such minor being represented by a next friend or guardian for the suit (6) The words “may be discharged” appear to give discretionary power to the Court (7) No order binds a minor unless he was

In all cases the question to be decided is whether on a construction of the plaint and pleadings the minor is really a party to the suit or not, and, if he be, any irregularity is provided for by sect 93, ante (4) And where a minor has been properly represented he is as much bound by a judgment in his own action as if he were of full age, (5) and the principle of res judicata applies (6) Where the decree is sought to be executed, the Court executing the decree cannot entertain the plea of non representation, as it must presume that the decree was rightly passed The minor's remedy is to apply for a review or to file a suit for an injunction restraining the execution of the decree (7) If a minor desire to have a decree set aside because any available good ground of defence was not put forward at the hearing by his guardian, he should apply for a review If the decree was ex parte, the procedure to be adopted is that prescribed by the Code for setting aside ex parte decrees Where a decree has been made against an infant duly represented, and the former on majority seeks to set that decree aside by separate suit he can succeed only on proof of fraud or collusion on the part of his guardian (8) The costs may be

Receipt of property under decree—This section was substituted in the 1st Code by Act VIII of 1890 sect 53 (d) It has been held that this rule did not apply in the case of a managing member of a Mitakshara joint family who was appointed guardian ad litem of his minor brother for the purpose of a rent suit in which both the brothers obtained a decree for arrears of rent (3)

[s. 462] 7 (1) No next friend or guardian for the suit shall, without the leave of the Court, expressly recorded in the proceedings, enter into any agreement or compromise on behalf of a minor with reference to the suit in which he acts as next friend or guardian

(2) Any such agreement or compromise entered into without the leave of the Court so recorded shall be voidable against all parties other than the minor.

Scope of rule—The provisions of this rule are intended to protect the interests of minors (4) and have been adopted (5) from the rule previously laid down by the Privy Council (6) A suit relating to the estate or person of an infant, and for his benefit has the effect of making him a ward of Court, and no act can be done affecting the property of the minor unless under the express or implied direction of the Court itself (1). This principle, on which the rule is based, has been applied to a case which it was held strictly did not fall within its terms, it being held that when the next friend of a minor withdrew from a suit, though it was not proved that the defendant entered into any agreement with the next friend, it was open to the minor through another next friend to have the suit re-opened on review, on the ground that the former next friend, though guilty of no fraudulent conduct, was grossly negligent of the minor's interest in withdrawing from the suit (2). The rule contemplates the existence of a guardian and a pending litigation, and was therefore held not to apply where when the agreement was made, there was neither a guardian for a suit nor a suit (3).

As to the effect of a compromise entered into without leave, vide post. Where a compromise was effected and allowed by the Court and a decree was made in accordance with its terms it was held that no appeal lay against the compromise decree, and that the remedy for setting it aside was by way of review or regular suit (4). Where a guardian had entered into a compromise without leave but undertook to present the petition to Court and subsequently declined to do so, and opposed a decree being passed in its terms it was held that inasmuch as leave had not been asked for and the guardian objected to the Court passing a decree in terms of the compromise, the Court had no power to enforce it, even though its terms might appear to be beneficial to the minors (5). A decree holder who rests his case upon his decree having been made against a minor by consent, is under the necessity of proving that the consent was given by some one having authority to bind the minor (6).

Leave—The Court has to grant leave. The form however of expression used for the purpose of indicating that the Court grants leave to compromise is of slight importance. The question is whether the Court after a consideration of the circumstances really intended to grant leave (7). The Court must however, in some form show that it has considered the question and granted leave. And the mere passing of a decree on a compromise does not amount to sanction, which will not be inferred from the subsequent passing of a decree in terms of such compromise (8). In order that a compromise may be binding upon a minor, the leave of the Court must be express and it must be arrived at upon the exercise of a judicial discretion as to the propriety of the compromise in the interests of the minor and the section makes no exception in the case of a certified guardian (1) Under the last Code such leave was presumed in certain cases (2) The amended rule now requires that the leave should be expressly recorded following the Privy Council decision that it should in some way, not open to doubt, be shown that the leave of the Court was obtained (3) Where a Hindu father was party to a partition suit and was himself the guardian ad litem of his minor son (also a party) it was held that the fact that he represented the family did not exempt him from the duty of obtaining leave for a compromise which was clearly intended to affect the son's interest, and that since such leave was not obtained, the son was not bound by it (4)

The Court should not make a decree by consent against an infant without ascertaining that it is for his benefit that such a decree should be pronounced (5) The Court must have before it the materials necessary to enable it to arrive at a judicial conclusion with respect to the compromise The terms and evidence of their propriety and reasonableness must be before it (6) In order to make an agreement or compromise, to which this rule applies, a lawful agreement or compromise, it is necessary that the next friend or guardian should ask the Court to consider the proposed terms of the agreement or compromise, and before making the agreement or entering into the compromise should obtain permission from the Court to enter into the agreement or compromise proposed The Court should record the fact that such application was made to it, that the terms of the proposed agreement or compromise were considered by the Court, and that, having regard to the interests of the minor, the Court granted leave to the making of the agreement or compromise From the mere fact that the Court passed the decree in accordance with the compromise it cannot be inferred that any of those steps preliminary and necessary to the making of the decree have been taken by the Court (7) If leave is given under a misrepresentation of a material fact, due either to fraud or culpable and wilful ignorance, it is not binding (8)

When necessary—The rule does not only refer to agreements out of Court but to such agreements as also to compromise decrees, namely, those agreements which are given effect to by a decree of the Court The words "any agreement etc.", include a compromise finally determining the suit (9) The provisions apply to compromises after decree (10) Applications in execution are proceedings in the suit so that a compromise of such a proceeding would be a compromise

"with reference to the suit" (1) A guardian has no power to waive a right to compensation for part of the estate taken under the Land Acquisition Act; (2) nor to enter into an agreement to refer matters in suit to arbitration, (3) though the contrary has also been held, (4) or to withdraw a suit without the leave of the Court (5) A mere matter of proof, such as the consent by a guardian of a minor defendant to accept the oath of the plaintiff, (6) or abstaining from pressing objections, it being uncertain whether there was evidence sufficient to sustain them (7) is not within the rule

Effect of want of leave.—A decree by consent without leave is invalid and not binding on the minor (8) The only modes, however, of setting aside a decree are by review under sect 114 or by a separate suit, (9) and not by application for a rule in the original suit, (10) or in execution proceedings under sect 47. the question whether a decree was void as against the minor not being one relating to the execution of the decree (11) The compromise can be avoided by a minor either on or before his attaining majority (12) In a recent Privy Council decision where a Hindu father had been appointed guardian ad litem of an infant son in a suit for partition by a member of the joint-family and had made a compromise without the leave of the Court it was held that the

(2) Where the next friend is not a guardian appointed or declared by an authority competent in his behalf, and an application is made by a guardian so appointed or declared, who desires to be himself appointed in the place of the next friend, the Court shall remove the next friend unless it considers, for reasons to be recorded by it, that the guardian ought not to be appointed the next friend of the minor, and shall thereupon appoint the applicant to be next friend in his place upon such terms as to the costs already incurred in the suit as it thinks fit

on coming of age, elect to proceed with the suit or withdraw from it (1) Courts can be moved to stay a suit improperly brought on behalf of an infant, and to remove an improper next friend of an infant and to substitute a proper person in his place (2) It has been considered expedient to enact that where a guardian insists on his right to be appointed next friend in the place of another there should be power to require him to become liable or give security for costs in the suit previously incurred, and the second clause has been amended accordingly

[s 453] (5) Any application under this rule may be made ex parte, but no order discharging a next friend and permitting a minor plaintiff to proceed in his own name shall be made without notice to the next friend

Election of minor to proceed—An application under this rule may be made ex parte and does not require notice. Leave (which may be nunc pro tunc) will be given as a matter of course unless there is an absolute bar by positive enactment. The provisions as to correction of title refer to a pending suit and not to a suit after final decree in which it only remains to proceed to execution. The omission to comply with the requirements of this rule is a mere irregularity and will not bar execution of a decree (1) Quære—whether a minor who having been a party to a suit but not properly represented, was served with summons afterwards on attaining majority carried on the suit as transferee of the estate from the previous owner, was not bound as a party (2)

(2) Notice of the application shall be served on the next friend, on any co plaintiff and on the defendant

(3) The costs of all parties of such application, and of all or any proceedings theretofore had in the suit, shall be paid by such persons as the Court directs

(2) Notice of the application shall be served on all the parties concerned, and the Court, upon being satisfied of such unreasonableness or impropriety, may grant the application and order the next friend to pay the costs of all parties in respect of the application and of anything done in the suit, or make such other order as it shall see fit

15 The provisions contained in rules 1 to 14, so far as they are applicable, shall extend to persons Application of rules to persons of unsound mind they are applicable, shall extend to persons adjudged to be of unsound mind and to persons who though not so adjudged are found by the Court on inquiry, by reason of unsoundness of mind or mental infirmity to be incapable of protecting their interests when suing or being sued

Persons of unsound mind or mentally infirm—By sect 463 of the last Code the provisions in sects 440 to 462 of that Code were declared mutatis mutandis to apply in the case of persons adjudged to be lunatics under Act XXX of 1858 or any other lunacy law for the time being in force. It was held that the provisions of sect 440 of the last Code were by that section to be applied to lunatics. Whatever might be the meaning of the word guardian in sect 440 when minors were concerned it was held that there was no reason to suppose that the Legislature intended to alter or affect the existing law in respect of the persons who alone are entitled to bring suits on behalf of the estate of a lunatic. The person denominated guardian must mean the person who is in self competent to sue. A guardian of the person only of a lunatic has no right to bring a suit in respect of the lunatic's estate. The manager of the estate is the person to do so though under sect 440 a person other than the guardian of the estate could also sue with the leave of the Court (1).

Sect 463 of the last Code applied in terms only to those adjudged to be of unsound mind and therefore in other cases of unsoundness of mind a next friend or guardian could not be appointed under Chapter XXXI (2). The provisions however of that Chapter were held not to be exhaustive and the Courts to have an inherent power to act in the interests of justice. Though a person alleged to be a lunatic though not so found might appear either in person or through a vakil (3) if it was held that a person of unsound mind was not entitled to sue by a next friend or defend by a guardian until he had been adjudged to be a lunatic serious failure of justice might result (4). Where therefore a person in question was or was not of unsound mind, and in the case of a suit instituted by a next friend whether the suit was for his benefit (2) It will be observed that the amended rule gives effect to these rulings, and the preceding rules are made directly applicable both to adjudged and non adjudged lunatics The rule also includes the mentally infirm so as to cover the case of a person incapacitated from protecting his interests by reason of his mental weakness or of his being a deaf mute

s 484] 16 Nothing in this Order shall apply to a Sovereign Prince or Ruling Chief being or being sued in the name of his State, or being sued by direction of the Governor General in Council or a Local Government in the name of an agent or in any other name, or shall be construed to affect or in any way derogate from the provisions of any local law for the time being in force relating to suits by or against minors or by or against lunatics or other persons of unsound mind

Princes and Chiefs—Sect 464 of the last Code, which this rule replaces, was substituted for the former section by sect 53 (e), Act VIII of 1890 The former section ran, after the word "name," "and nothing in sects 442-462 applies to any minor or person of unsound mind for whose person or property a guardian or manager has been appointed by the Court of Wards (3) or by the Civil Court under any civil law

Suits by Paupers

Suits may be instituted in forma pauperis instituted by a pauper

Explanation — A person is a "pauper" when he is not possessed of sufficient means to enable him to pay the fee prescribed by law for the plaint in such suit, or, where no such fee is prescribed, when he is not entitled to property worth one hundred rupees other than his necessary wearing apparel and the subject matter of the suit

mortgaging his claims (1). A Hindu father's wealth is not a bar to a son suing as a pauper to prove his adoption, (2) nor does a husband's wealth preclude a wife suing as a pauper when she cannot claim from him the means of carrying on the suit (3). In the case of minors the English practice (4) appears to be not to allow a minor to institute a suit through his next friend, unless he gives proof not only that he is himself a pauper, but that the next friend is a pauper, and that he cannot get any substantial person to act as next friend (5). Following this practice, the Calcutta High Court allowed a suit to be brought in forma pauperis by a next friend who was also a pauper (6). The question whether a minor might sue as a pauper by a next friend who was not a pauper was not decided in that case, but the right was subsequently affirmed by the Madras High Court, (7) which held that the English practice to the contrary was not justified by the Code. The Code does not exclude persons holding a fiduciary character, and therefore an executor or administrator can sue in forma pauperis (8). It has been held that there is no necessity for an inquiry whether an alleged representative of an admitted pauper is a pauper or not, and that the Court, if satisfied that he is the legal representative, should admit him to carry on the suit (9). But the Bombay High Court has disagreed (10). The conditions of pauperism are different (a) when the plaintiff requires a court fee, and (b) when none is required. In either case the effect of pauperism is the same. As regards the first case the measure is the sum required to pay the fee on the plaint. In the second case Rs 100 is the measure. The intention in both cases is the same, viz to fix a certain sum—in one case the fee on the plaint, and in the other case Rs 100, and to provide that if the petitioner has not this sum at his disposal, he will be exempt from court fees (11). So properly admitted to be the property of the petitioner is not the "subject matter of the suit," although claimed in the petition (12). The concluding portion of the Explanation, "other than his necessary wearing apparel" etc., do not govern its first part (13).

Formerly excepted suits.—Under art 103 of the last Code a pauper could not sue to recover compensation for loss of caste, libel, slander, abusive language, or assault. The suits excepted were strictly limited to those mentioned. Where it was argued that Chapter XXVI of the former Code was intended to apply only to suits for the enforcement of personal claims, and therefore not to suits under the Religious Endowments Act, or sect 53J (now 92, 93) of the Code, it was held, that in that Chapter, and particularly in sect 102 and the former section corresponding with r 5, the restrictions on the liberty of the right to sue as a pauper were expressly prescribed and that the Court would be adding to those restrictions if it held that a person should not be allowed to sue as a pauper when his suit is one that is brought under the Act mentioned (1) There are, however, now, no excepted suits, as sect 102 of the last Code has not been re enacted The Special Committee stated that in the light of the case law it was misleading, so far as it suggested that a suit would lie for loss of caste or abusive language, and they saw no sufficient reason for withholding from a pauper a right to sue as such in respect of defamation or assault

Examination of applicant—It was held under the corresponding section of the Code of 1859, that the examination referred to is that of the petitioner or his or her agent and that at this stage the Court has no power to examine witnesses (2) The present rule also speaks merely of the examination of the petitioner or his agent If on the examination some of the grounds appear which are mentioned in the next rule then notices are to issue as provided in r 6 and they pave the way to the formal hearing mentioned in r 7, at which the question of the applicant's pauperism has to be determined The proceedings under this (3) and the next rule are of a preliminary character, and a rejection under them is not as in the case of r 7, of a final kind and a bar to a subsequent application (4)

The rule directs the examination of an applicant regarding the merits in order that it may be ascertained whether his allegations show or do not show a right to sue (5) The mere statements in the plaint cannot be accepted as the sole material on which a decision as to this question can depend, for if this were so the granting of an application would depend not on whether the pauper had in fact any merits to go upon, but on the skill of the person drafting his petition and plaint, and the examination as to the merits under this section would be superfluous (6)

 (d) where his allegations do not show a cause of action, or
 (e) where he has entered into any agreement with reference to the subject matter of the proposed suit under which any other person has obtained an interest in such subject-matter.

Rejection or application—The provisions of this rule, operating as they do in derogation of the ordinary rights of a litigant, must be construed strictly, and the exercise of the Court's power to reject under this rule is limited to the grounds specified in the various clauses of the rule itself (1)

There are conflicting decisions as to whether an appeal does (2) or does not (3) lie from an order rejecting an application to sue as a pauper. It has, however, been held in several cases (4) that such an order is subject to revision. As to limitation in the case of pauper applications, see below (5)

Clause (d) in the last Code ran, "that his allegations do not show a right to sue in such Court." The concluding words, 'sue in such Court,' lent some support to the argument that the paragraph referred to the jurisdiction of the Court, and not to the cause of action disclosed in the application (6). It was, however, held that the words 'show a right to sue' cannot be read as limiting the Court's discretion to merely ascertaining whether 'the right to sue' arose within its jurisdiction, but have a more extended meaning, namely that an applicant must make out that he has a good subsisting cause of action capable of enforcement in Court, and calling for an answer and not barred by the law of limitation or any other law (7). This is now made clear in the amended clause

In Mumtazan v Rasulan, 23 A. 361, 366 (1901) it was treated as clear that no appeal lay from an order granting leave to sue as a pauper.

So the Court will see not only whether it has jurisdiction,(1) but whether there is a right to sue or cause of action to be entertained,(2) and, assuming so, whether the intended suit is barred by res judicata (3) or limitation,(4) or whether a previous application has been refused (5). The Madras High Court in one case,(6) and apparently the Calcutta High Court,(7) have held that if the petitioner shows a right to sue, the Judge should allow the application without going into the merits of the claim, the examination as to the merits under r 4 being merely for the purpose of ascertaining whether the allegations do or do not show a right to sue, or cause of action. Where a plaint in forma pauperis has been admitted, but the Court holds that it has no jurisdiction, and returns the plaint to the plaintiff, it has no jurisdiction to make the plaintiff pay the court fees (8). An agreement by a plaintiff, about to sue to redeem a village, to pay his vakil a lump sum of Rs 1500, and in default to realize it out of the revenue of the property, was held to be an agreement within the scope of clause (c) (9). No leave to appeal in forma pauperis will be given where there is subsisting such an agreement (10).

403 1 6 Where the Court sees no reason to reject the application on any of the grounds stated in rule 5, it shall fix a day (of which at least ten days' clear notice shall be given to the opposite party and the Government pleader) for receiving such evidence as the applicant may adduce in proof of his pauperism, and for hearing any evidence which may be adduced in disproof thereof.

409 1 7. (1) On the day so fixed or as soon thereafter as may be convenient, the Court shall examine the witnesses (if any) produced by either party, and may examine the applicant or his agent, and shall make a memorandum of the substance of their evidence.

(2) The Court shall also hear any argument which the parties may desire to offer on the question whether, on the face of the application and of the evidence (if any) taken by the Court as herein provided, the applicant is or is not subject to any of the prohibitions specified in rule 5.

(3) The Court shall then either allow or refuse to allow the applicant to sue as a pauper.

Examine—The examination must be conducted by the Judge in person (1) As appears from the second paragraph, and was previously held, (2) the examination is not limited to the question of pauperism, but embraces all the matters referred to in r 5, ante (3) This paragraph enables the parties to argue the question if they so desire, but does not preclude the Court, if no argument is offered, from considering that question (4) If a new defendant be added, an inquiry must be made in the presence of such new defendant (5) Semble, that an order admitting a plaintiff to sue as a pauper made by one Court becomes ineffectual when the plaint is returned by that Court, and that it becomes the duty of the Court before which the petition is subsequently presented to pass orders de novo on the subject (6) The inquiry into pauperism under this and the previous rule takes place before any suit is in existence, for until an application to sue as a pauper is granted there is no plaint and consequently no suit (7) As to appeal and revision, see notes to r 5, and as to review, notes to r 15

8. Where the application is granted, it shall be numbered and registered, and shall be deemed the plaint in the suit, and the suit shall proceed in all other respects as a suit instituted in the ordinary manner, except that the plaintiff shall not be liable to pay any court fee (other than fees payable for service of process) in respect of any petition, appointment of a pleader or other proceedings connected with the suit.

Admission of application—When an application is granted no appeal lies (8) The order cannot be set aside either on appeal or motion by a superior Court If, subsequently to permission being granted it appears that the order has been obtained improperly, application should be made to the Court out of which the order issued (9) Limitation depends on the date of the application

9 The Court may, on the application of the defendant, or of the Government Pleader, of which seven days' clear notice in writing has been given to the plaintiff, order the plaintiff to be dispaupered—

Dispaupering.

- (a) if he is guilty of vexatious or improper conduct in the course of the suit,
- (b) if it appears that his means are such that he ought not to continue to sue as a pauper, or
- (c) if he has entered into any agreement with reference to the subject-matter of the suit, under which any other person has obtained an interest in such subject-matter

Dispaupering—If it appears from facts that have been discovered after permission to sue in forma pauperis has been granted, that the applicant ought not to be allowed to continue to litigate as a pauper, the remedy is by application under this rule to the Court which made the order, and not by appeal or motion in the superior Courts (4)

10 Where the plaintiff succeeds in the suit, the Court shall calculate the amount of court fees which would have been paid by the plaintiff if he had not been permitted to sue as a pauper, such amount shall be recoverable by the Government from any party ordered by the decree to pay the same, and shall be a first charge on the subject matter of the suit

notes to next rule. The Crown has a right to receive fees at the institution of every suit. It temporarily foregoes (r 8) its right in the case of pauper plaintiffs, and thus places means in their hands to proceed to judgment against their defendants. Without the forbearance of Government to insist on its ordinary rule, the suit in such a case could not have been brought or the money realized. It is therefore reasonable that the Crown, in consideration of its giving up its rights to these fees, should have for their defrayal the first claim on the proceeds of the pauper suit (1). The order should not be a contingent one (2). The amount of court fees is a first charge (3) on the subject matter (1) of the suit. To enforce it the Government need not bring a separate suit, but can realize the court fee from the property by proceedings in execution (5). The rule is enabling, and though it indicates the manner in which the Crown may proceed to realize the debt, it does not preclude the Crown or its representatives from urging its prerogative and insisting on its rights to precedence over all their creditors (6). The period allowed to Government is the ordinary period allowed for execution to an individual under the Limitation Act (7). The section provides that persons who have been successful as paupers shall, so far as the subject-matter of their success is concerned, be liable to satisfy, out of what they recover, the amount of the fees which have been for a time, pending the decision of their suit, remitted to them. But the Collector cannot sell the decree, that is, the whole of the plaintiff's right in the decree, which he has got without waiting for the recovery by the plaintiff of that for which he has got his decree (8). An order under this rule for sale of property for the purpose of realizing court fees, and a sale under such order, are ultra vires and a nullity when, in fact, there was no jurisdiction in the Court to make the order (9). In addition to their being a first charge, they are also recoverable from any party ordered to pay. If the pauper succeeds, the fees payable to Government are, under this rule, recoverable from the defendant (10). A defendant should not, however, be made liable to pay court fees on any sum greater than that decreed against him (1) If the pauper fails, these fees are, under the next rule, recoverable from the plaintiff (2) Government may be deemed to have been a party to the suit, and therefore orders deciding any matter between Government and the party charged are open to appeal under sect 47, ante (3) See r 13, post

(b) because the plaintiff does not appear when the suit is called on for hearing

the Court shall order the plaintiff, or any person added as a co plaintiff to the suit, to pay the court fees which would have been paid by the plaintiff if he had not been permitted to sue as a pauper

Failure of suit—There has been some conflict as to the meaning of the word "fails". It has been held that r 10 only applies where there has been a contest, or else an admission of the claim which has avoided a contest, and refers to cases of adjudicated success, and that similarly, this rule applies only to cases of adjudicated failure, and to the other cases specified as where the plaintiff has been dispaupered or the suit has been dismissed under O IX rr 2, 3, ante (4) It was held, therefore, not to apply where the parties came to an amicable arrangement under which the suit was to be dismissed (5) And where an appeal in forma pauperis was withdrawn, it was held that no order could be made either under this rule or r 9, and that it was not open to the Court to order the respondents to pay any fees on the strength of any agreement between the parties (6) The last decision but one has, however, been dissented from by the Madras High Court, which has held that the words "succeeds" in the last rule and "fails" in this, refer to the ultimate decision or the result of the suit, and not to the mode in which the decision is arrived at, that it would be doing violence to the language of the section to introduce the words "after contest," and that a pauper plaintiff is liable to pay the stamp-duty if his suit is dismissed without trial (7) A Full Bench of the Bombay High Court has more recently held that where there is a withdrawal as the result of a compromise, the plaintiff does not succeed within the meaning of the last rule, but "fails" within the meaning of this (1). The section has now been amended to include a withdrawal.

The terms of this rule are mandatory, and it is obligatory upon the Court when it passes its decree to provide in that decree for payment by the plaintiff of the court fees (2). The decisions, however, are conflicting upon the question whether where the Court omits to make an order, the Government may, (3) or may not, (4) apply to rectify the decree. R 12 now declares the right of Government to apply. An order under this rule amounts to a decree in favour of Government against the unsuccessful plaintiff for the amount of the court fees, and can be executed by attachment and sale of any property he possesses (5). This and the last rule only deal with the fees payable to Government. Costs, that is, costs of parties inter se against a pauper plaintiff might, it was held, be awarded to a successful defendant under Chapter XVIII of the former Code (6).

Where a suit is instituted by a next friend on behalf of a minor, the latter is the plaintiff. It frequently is right to make a guardian or next friend liable for costs, but there are also cases in which it is not proper to do so. And it does not necessarily follow that because the suit is unsuccessful, the next friend is, as a matter of course, to be ordered personally to pay the costs (7).

The origin of the last penal clause of sect 142 of the last Code is to be found in sect 53, Reg IV of 1827, known as Elphinstone's Code, where however, it is made applicable to all plaintiffs alike. It was omitted from the Code of 1859, but re-enacted in that section with respect to pauper plaintiffs not for the purpose of exempting them from paying costs to a successful defendant but because it was deemed necessary to provide a special protection to defendants against being harassed by persons who ex hypothesi are not likely to be influenced by the fear of having to pay costs (8). It has now been altogether omitted.

An order refusing to allow the applicant to sue as a pauper shall be a bar to any subsequent application of the like nature by him in respect of the same right to sue; but the applicant shall be at liberty to institute a suit in the ordinary manner in respect of such right, provided that he first pays the costs (if any) and by the opposite party in opposition to sue as a pauper.

Bar to subsequent application.—There must be a "refusal." Therefore the rule does not apply where the Court has not passed such an order, as, for instance, if it returns the application to have the question of pauperism tried by a Court of concurrent jurisdiction; (1) or strikes off "for the present" the application for default by non-appearance. Under such circumstances the application may be renewed (2). The provisions, moreover, of this rule do not affect the right of a person against whom an order of refusal has been made to obtain a review, and an order under r. 7, refusing leave to sue as a pauper, is subject to review under sect. 114 (3). Assuming, however, that there is an order which is final, the bar under this rule being one to jurisdiction, a Court is competent and bound to take notice of it at any stage of the suit (4).

On the rejection of an application for leave to sue as a pauper, the only course open to the applicant is that declared in this rule, viz. to institute a suit in the ordinary way, and the date of the institution of that suit for the Costs incurred.—Although this rule makes it a condition precedent in the institution of an ordinary suit by a person whose application to sue in forma pauperis has been rejected that he should first pay the costs incurred by Government, the suit ought not to be dismissed for default in payment of such costs when no demand for the payment has been made either on behalf of the Government or by the Court (5)

ORDER XXXIV.

Suits relating to Mortgages of Immoveable Property.

1 Subject to the provisions,

Parties to suits for an interest foreclosure sale and the right of redemption to any suit relating to the mortgage

Explanation—A puisne mortgagee may sue for foreclosure or for sale without making the prior mortgagee a party to the suit, and a prior mortgagee need not be joined in a suit to redeem a subsequent mortgage

Mortgage suits—This Order is taken (with the exception of rr 9 and 11 which are new) from sects 85-90, 92-94, 96, 97 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). R 14 is a provision analogous to sect 100 of that Act, both dealing with charges. Certain amendments, chiefly by way of addition, have been made, to which notice will be drawn. The object of the introduction of this Order was stated to be that hitherto some confusion had been occasioned by the co-existence of the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act and of the Code in regard to execution in mortgage suits. The incorporation of this Order in the Code would, it was said, be welcomed by every one who is familiar with the almost endless controversies which have gathered round the applicability of the provisions of the Code to the enforcement of decrees for sale under the Transfer of Property Act. It was considered that the provisions relating to execution in mortgage suits—that is, questions of procedure—should be dealt with in their entirety in the Code, and this Order has been introduced to give effect to this view. As a consequence of this the sections above mentioned of the Transfer of Property Act as also sect 99 (as to which, see r 14), and a portion of sect 100 of that Act, have been repealed by the fifth schedule. The general effect of this order, therefore, is that the ordinary provisions of the Code apply to mortgage suits and the execution of mortgage decrees, unless there be some special exception to the contrary. It has been said that the effect of the incorporation of these sections of the Transfer of Property Act is that the Original Side of the Calcutta High Court should discard any independent practice based on the old procedure (1). The subject of this Order has already been fully dealt with by Dr Rash Behary Ghose in his work on mortgages and by Mr H S Gour in his Law of Transfer in British India. It is not necessary, therefore, to go over the same ground. We therefore content ourselves with noting the amendments and additions effected by the present Code.

R 1 is taken from sect 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, but after the word "interest" substitutes, in lieu of the words "in the property comprised in a mortgage," (1) the words "either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption." The former phrase, "Having an interest in the property," etc., has been the subject of numerous cases, which will be found collected in Mr Gour's work. It was proposed to add at the end of the first paragraph of the rule the words "and the decree shall not bind any person not so joined." Sect 85 of the Act contained the proviso following: "Provided that the plaintiff has notice of such interest." It was pointed out that this proviso had given rise to certain doubts which it was sought to remove by substituting for it the words cited with a view to making it clear (2) that a person not a party is not bound by a decree. It has been recently held that a mortgagee who is made a defendant, and who omits to set up a mortgagee who is barred from suing on such mortgage where in consequence of his omission the property is ordered to be sold free from the mortgage which had not been pleaded (3). As regards the former proviso it was said (4) that the proviso subordinating the obligation to join, to notice, was unnecessary and misleading. For, in the absence of any discriminating equity affecting the right of excluded interests, it was not clear what object the proviso was intended to serve. Could it be supposed that if the plaintiff had omitted to join a necessary party because he had no notice of his interest, then his interest would be differently affected to what they would be if he was excluded even though the plaintiff did have notice of his interest? Notice may sometimes affect the question, but it does not always do so. The proviso has now been omitted, but the proposed addition has not (probably as being unnecessary) been made. It has been held that a son in a Mitakshara joint family is a person having an interest in the mortgage and is a necessary party (5). But in a suit for sale on a mortgage where the defendant mortgagors were the managing members of a Mitakshara joint family who in that capacity had purchased the mortgaged property it was held by the Allahabad High Court that the family was sufficiently represented by them and that the suit would not fail through non joinder of the other members (6). The Calcutta High Court has recently dissented from this holding that under this rule a mortgage suit brought by the karta of a joint family without making the other members of the family parties is not maintainable (7). It has also been

ORDER XXXIV.

Suits relating to Mortgages of Immoveable Property.

1 Subject to the provisions of this Code, all persons having an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption shall be joined as parties to any suit relating to the mortgage.

Parties to suits for foreclosure sale and redemption

Explanation—A puisne mortgagee may sue for foreclosure or for sale without making the prior mortgagee a party to the suit; and a prior mortgagee need not be joined in a suit to redeem a subsequent mortgage

Mortgage suits—This Order is taken (with the exception of rr 9 and 11 which are new) from sects 85-90, 92-94 96, 97 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) R 14 is a provision analogous to sect 100 of that Act, both dealing with charges. with by Dr Rash Behary Ghose in his work on mortgages and by Mr H S Gour

R 1 is taken from sect 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, but after the word "interest" substitutes, in lieu of the words "in the property comprised in a mortgage", (1) the words "either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption". The former phrase, "Having an interest in the property," etc., has been the subject of numerous cases, which will be found collected in Mr Gour's work. It was proposed to add at the end of the first paragraph of the rule the words 'and the decree shall not bind any person not so joined'. Sect 85 of the Act contained the proviso following 'Provided that the plaintiff has notice of such interest'. It was pointed out that this proviso had given rise to certain doubts which it was sought to remove by substituting for it the words cited with a view to making it clear (2) that a person not a party is not bound by a decree. It has been recently held that a mortgagee who is made a defendant and who omits to set up a mortgage is barred from suing on such mortgage where in consequence of his omission the property is ordered to be sold free from the mortgage which had not been pleaded (3). As regards the former proviso it was said (4) that the proviso subordinating the obligation to join to notice, was unnecessary and misleading. For, in the absence of any discriminating equity affecting the right of excluded interests it was not clear what object the proviso was intended to serve. Could it be supposed that if the plaintiff had omitted to join a necessary party because he had no notice of his interest, then his interest would be differently affected to what they would be if he was excluded even though the plaintiff did have notice of his interest? Notice may sometimes affect the question but it does not always do so. The proviso has now been omitted but the proposed addition has not (probably as being unnecessary) been made. It has been held that a son in a Mitakshara joint-family is a person having an interest in the mortgage and is a necessary party (5). held that the effect of an intentional non joinder of a subsequent mortgagee in a suit on a prior mortgage would not be the dismissal of the suit but only of so much of it as relates to property affected by the subsequent mortgage (1)

Even if the non joinder as a party defendant who ought to have been made a party to a suit for sale on a mortgage is by itself a defect fatal to the suit, such defect is cured if the Court acting under O I r 10, sub rule (2), adds such person as a defendant (2)

The Explanation to r 1 is new. There were a number of decisions on the question whether a prior mortgagee was a necessary party in a suit to enforce a subsequent mortgage, a question the determination of which depended upon the meaning to be attached to the word "property" in sect 85. Was all that was involved in the puisne mortgagee's suit the equity of redemption, in which case the prior mortgagee not being interested therein need not be joined, or was the interest involved something more than the equity? in other words, the mortgaged property subject to the rights of the prior mortgagee, in which case the latter was a necessary party. This question has now been settled by the exclusion of the ambiguous word "property" in the body of the rule and the addition of the Explanation, which removes the doubts which have arisen from the conflict of authorities on the point.

In r 2 (c) the words "if so required" have been added before "retransfer". The special Committee stating that according to Mofussil practice a retransfer was not ordinarily required, and being of opinion that this practice should not be altered. It has been held that a Court passing a preliminary decree in a mortgage suit under this rule has no power to award interest at other than the contractual rate up to the time fixed for payment unless for some legal reason it sees fit to interfere with the contract as to the rate of interest (3).

The same Committee as regards r 3 omitted a proposed provision as to the defendant paying money to the plaintiff, considering it better that in every case he should pay into Court. Clauses (a) and (b) of the same rule are new, as are also the similar clauses in rr 5 and 8. R 5 (2) deals with an application by the plaintiff only. The concluding words of sect 89, "and thereupon the defendant's right to redeem and the security shall both be extinguished," have been omitted.

Clause (3) of r 8 appears to be an addition. The question which may be raised in connection with this rule, whether one suit for redemption has the effect of barring a second suit for the same relief, has already been dealt with. See notes to sect 9, O II r 2, sects 11-14, and Index.

R 9 is new. It is a recognition of existing practice and remedies, and is an obvious omission in the Transfer of Property Act.

So also is r 11, which has been inserted in compliance with the suggestion of the Privy Council (4). This rule was in the Transfer of Property Bill, but

The third paragraph of r. 13 has been amended

2 In a suit for foreclosure, if the plaintiff succeeds, the Court

Preliminary decree in foreclosure-suit shall pass a decree—

(a) ordering that an account be taken of what will be due to the plaintiff for principal and interest on the mortgage, and for his costs of the suit (if any) awarded to him on the day next hereinafter referred to, or

(b) declaring the amount so due at the date of such decree, and directing—

(c) that if the defendant pays into Court the amount so due on a day within six months from the date of declaring in Court the amount so due to be fixed by the Court, the plaintiff shall deliver up to the defendant, or to such person as he appoints, all documents in his possession or power relating to the mortgaged property, and shall, if so required, retransfer the property to the defendant free from the mortgage and from all incumbrances created by the plaintiff or any person claiming under him, or, where the plaintiff claims by derived title, by those under whom he claims, and shall also, if necessary, put the defendant in possession of the property, but

(d) that, if such payment is not made on or before the day to be fixed by the Court, the defendant shall be debarred from all right to redeem the property

3 (1) Where, on or before the day fixed, the defendant pays

Final decree in foreclosure-suit into Court the amount declared due as aforesaid, together with such subsequent costs as are mentioned in rule 10, the Court shall pass a decree—

(a) ordering the plaintiff to deliver up the documents which under the terms of the preliminary decree he is bound to deliver up, and, if so required,

(b) ordering him to retransfer the mortgaged property as directed in the said decree, and, also, if necessary,

(c) ordering him to put the defendant in possession of the property

(2) Where such payment is not so made the Court shall, on application made in that behalf by the plaintiff, pass a decree that the defendant and all persons claiming through or under him be debarred from all right to redeem the mortgaged property and also, if necessary, ordering the defendant to put the plaintiff in possession of the property.

Power to enlarge time Provided that the Court may, upon good cause shown and upon such terms (if any) as it thinks fit, from time to time postpone the day fixed for such payment

(3) On the passing of a decree under sub rule (2) the debt secured by the mortgage shall be deemed to be discharged

Discharge of debt

Clauses (a) and (b), sub rule (1) —See notes to r 1 ante The Transfer of Property Act did not contain any provision for the passing of a final decree in cases where payment was made in accordance with the terms of the preliminary decree. This was an omission which has been supplied in the first clause of this rule, and of rr 5 and 8, post. These provide for the passing of final decrees in such cases

Extension of time—As to appeal sec O XLIII r 1 (c)

4 (1) In a suit for sale, if the plaintiff succeeds, the Court shall pass a decree to the effect mentioned in clauses (a), (b) and (c) of rule 3 and also directing that, in default of the defendant paying as therein mentioned, the mortgaged property or a sufficient part thereof be sold, and that the proceeds of the sale (after defraying thereout the expenses of the sale) be paid into Court and applied in payment of what is declared due to the plaintiff as aforesaid, together with subsequent interest and subsequent costs, and that the balance (if any) be paid to the defendant or other persons entitled to receive the same

Preliminary decree in suit for sale

(2) In a suit for foreclosure, if the plaintiff succeeds and the mortgage is not a mortgage by conditional sale, the Court may, at the instance of the plaintiff or of any person interested either in the mortgage money or in the right of redemption, pass a like decree (in lieu of a decree for foreclosure) on such terms as it thinks fit, including the deposit in Court of a reasonable sum, fixed by the Court, to meet the expenses of sale and to secure the performance of the terms

Power to decree sale in foreclosure suit

5 (1) Where on or before the day fixed the defendant pays into Court the amount declared due as aforesaid, together with such subsequent costs as are mentioned in rule 10, the Court shall pass a decree—

Final decree in suit for sale

(a) ordering the plaintiff to deliver up the documents which under the terms of the preliminary decree he is bound to deliver up, and, if so required,

(b) ordering him to retransfer the mortgaged property as directed in the said decree, and also, if necessary,

(c) ordering him to put the defendant in possession of the property

(2) Where such payment is not so made, the Court shall, on application made in that behalf by the plaintiff, pass a decree that the mortgaged property, or a sufficient part thereof, be sold, and that the proceeds of the sale be dealt with as is mentioned in rule 4

Clauses (a) and (b), sub rule (1) — See notes to r 1 and 3 ante. It is now provided by this rule that the application which follows a preliminary decree for sale is for a decree for sale (1) An application for a decree absolute for sale of a mortgage charge, under the terms of a consent decree which provided for satisfaction of the decretal debt by instalments is an application under this order, and is governed by Art 181, Sched I of the Limitation Act and must be made within three years from the accrual of the right to apply (2)

6 Where the net proceeds of any such sale are found to be insufficient to pay the amount due to the plaintiff, if the balance is legally recoverable from the defendant otherwise than out of the property sold, the Court may pass a decree for such amount

In making a decree against the mortgagor personally under this rule the Court may direct payment by instalments under O XX r 11 (3)

7. In a suit for redemption, if the plaintiff succeeds, the Court shall pass a decree—

(a) ordering that an account be taken of what will be due to the defendant for principal and interest on the mortgage, and for his costs of the suit (if any) awarded to him on the day next hereinafter referred to, or

(b) declaring the amount so due at the date of such decree, and directing—

Prior mortgage — See notes to r 1 ante

14 (1) Where a mortgagee has obtained a decree for the payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage, he shall not be entitled to bring the mortgaged property to sale otherwise than by instituting a suit for sale in enforcement of the mortgage, and he may institute such suit notwithstanding anything contained in Order II, rule 2

(2) Nothing in sub rule (1) shall apply to any territories to which the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, has not been extended.

It has been said that this rule has merely effected a change of procedure in the manner in which mortgaged property must be realized in execution of money decrees (1)

Suit for sale — The Code repeals sect 99 of the Transfer of Property Act. In its place this rule has been enacted. The first part of that section provided that a mortgagee should not bring the mortgaged property to sale otherwise than by instituting a suit under sect 67 of that Act. In so far as it precluded the mortgagee from selling the mortgaged property under a judgment unconnected with the mortgage debt it has been considered inexpedient. It was held and doubt competent to a mortgagee to purchase the equity of redemption

tion from the mortgagor by an agreement subsequent to, and distinct from, the mortgage transaction. There was no reason, therefore, why it should not be equally competent to him to have it sold in satisfaction of any claim which he might have against the mortgagor unconnected with the mortgage (1). This has accordingly been enacted. Sect. 99 spoke of "any claim whether arising under the mortgage or not." The present rule is limited to claims arising under the mortgage. To this extent only the former provisions are retained. The Select Committee were also at one time of the opinion that sect. 99, in so far as it precluded the mortgagee from selling the property under a judgment for the mortgage debt served no useful purpose. As to this they wrote "We understand that the provision was enacted to prevent mortgagees from suing their mortgagors on the debt as such, and in execution selling the mortgagor's interest in the property, we, however, think that no such provision was needed seeing that under the law, as it stood prior to the Act, the Courts never allowed the sale of a bare equity of redemption under a judgment on the covenant" (2). It was however, subsequently considered that as the mortgagor would be deprived of the benefit of the period of redemption given him by a mortgage-decree under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, unless the former provisions were maintained in respect of claims arising under the mortgage, the former restrictions should to this extent be retained in those territories to which that Act applied. Where a usufructuary mortgagee who had not obtained possession brought a suit for possession and this was compromised and by consent a simple money decree was passed in his favour, it was held that the decree being one passed on a compromise he was not precluded from bringing the mortgaged property to sale in execution of it (3). Where usufructuary mortgagees obtained a decree for possession and costs and then in execution of the decree for costs applied for attachment of part of the property it was held that this application was not barred by this rule (4). In a recent case where mortgagees, stating that they had relinquished their claim under the mortgage obtained a simple money decree and when this was not satisfied proceeded to put their mortgage into Court and prayed for a decree for sale on it it was held that the former proceedings were not a bar to this suit (5).

Interpleader—Prior to the English Judicature Acts, the right of interpleader at Common Law differed from that in Equity. Common Law interpleader was regulated by the Interpleader Act (1 & 2 Will 4, c 58), and the C L P Act of 1860 (2). The language of sects 470 and 471 of the last Code was almost identical with that of the first mentioned statute, and the English rulings, so far as the two enactments are the same, applied (3). The English Acts, with the exception of sect 17 of the C L P Act, 1860, are now repealed, and the right of interpleader and practice in interpleader proceedings are regulated in England exclusively by O 57. As to the form of an interpleader suit, see case last cited. The prohibition in r 5 forbidding a tenant to bring a suit to compel his landlord to interplead with another person not claiming through

(2) In any case in which the plaint and summons are in such forms, respectively, the defendant shall not appear or defend the suit unless he obtains leave from a Judge as hereinafter provided so to appear and defend, and, in default of his obtaining such leave or of his appearance and defence in pursuance thereof, the allegations in the plaint shall be deemed to be admitted, and the plaintiff shall be entitled to a decree for any sum not exceeding the sum mentioned in the summons, together with interest at the rate specified (if any) to the date of the decree, and such sum for costs as may be prescribed, unless the plaintiff claims more than such fixed sum, in which case the costs shall be ascertained in the ordinary way, and such decree may be executed forthwith.

Scope of rules.—In 1885 was passed the English Summary Procedure on Bills of Exchange Act (18 & 19 Vict. c. 67). Subsequently to the passing of the Code of 1859, the Indian Bills of Exchange Act (V. of 1866) was passed. The words of the Indian Act were slightly larger than those of the English Act, (1) but in spirit the two Acts were precisely the same (2). The Code of 1877 consolidated the provisions of the Code of 1859 and of Act V of 1866 from sect 2, of which Act sect 532 in the last Code was taken (3). The intention of the Act was that where there was no pretence for a defence the party sued should not be allowed to defend, and the plaintiff should have judgment as of course, but that if the defendant had a real, though it may not be a good, defence, he should have leave to appear and to set it up (4). The effect of the provision therefore is, that where leave is refused, the plaintiff gets a decree on his allegations merely, unsupported by evidence, on proof of service of summons and on the usual certificate of the Registrar that no leave to defend has been obtained (5). If leave is granted, the suit proceeds as one instituted in the ordinary course, evidence being taken on both sides.

"Suits upon bills of exchange," etc.—The rule is confined to suits on negotiable instruments, (6) and the plaintiff is entitled to claim by his summons and obtain by his decree whatever sum, principal, and interest is, on the legal construction of the instrument demandable (7). As, however, already stated, the plaintiff, when no leave to defend is granted, gets his decree upon his simple statement in the plaint unsupported by any evidence. It was accordingly formerly held (8) that it was not the intention of the Legislature that a summons served in the form prescribed by the former section should have the effect of enabling the plaintiff's statement of the fact, in his petition to prevail without evidence. The section it was considered applied only to those simple cases in which the negotiable instrument itself, together with mere lapse of time, was sufficient to establish for the plaintiff a prima facie right to recover. Therefore the section was held not to apply where a promissory note was payable by instalments, and contained a stipulation that on default in payment of the first instalment the whole amount was to become due, and a suit was brought to recover the whole amount on default in payment of the first instalment, as in such case the plaintiff was obliged to allege the occurrence of another fact before the first instalment was due.

(1) The Act is now repealed in the High Court (O II r 6), but is in operation in County Courts. on a negotiable instrument was not limited to such cases. Thus, had the case cited occurred after the enactment of the Explanation, a decree would have been granted (1). The last mentioned case appeared, however, to throw doubt on the point, and with a view to clear it up the following amendments were suggested —

"The provisions of this rule shall not be deemed to be inapplicable to a suit merely because the cause of action includes facts which, if not admitted by the defendant, would have to be proved by the plaintiff."

(a) A sues B upon a promissory note bearing an endorsement of payment which has been cancelled. This section is not inapplicable merely because A must prove that the note was endorsed by inadvertence but that payment was not made and the endorsement cancelled in consequence.

(b) A executes, in favour of B, a promissory note for Rs 1,000 payable in two equal instalments on the 1st July and 1st September, respectively, with a stipulation that, in default of payment of the first instalment the whole amount shall become immediately payable. On the 1st July, B sues A for the whole amount. This section is not inapplicable merely because B must allege and prove that the first instalment was not paid on the 1st July.

As regards, however, the proposed amendment the Special Committee reported that the explanation to sect 532 of the last Code was inserted to negative the effect of the decision in 1 Cal 130 but its meaning as it stood was obscure. They therefore deleted the explanation and added the words italicized in the body of the rule, "the allegations in the plaint shall be deemed to be admitted" which will remove the doubts at which the explanation was aimed. Suits under this Order must be brought within six months from the time the instrument sued on becomes due and payable (2).

Summons—The plaint is in the ordinary form but as evidence is not receivable, particular care must be taken to see that all the facts showing how the cause of action arose are stated in the plaint (3). The summons however, either follows the Form in the Schedule or is in such other form as the High Court may from time to time prescribe. (See notes to next rule.) After the usual return of service and the expiration of the period mentioned in the summons an order of Court for a decree should be obtained (4). Quare—whether the Court has power to grant an extension of time if an application for such extension be made before the time fixed by the summons has expired. fixed by the summons itself as the time within which the defendant might apply for leave. But where the time fixed by the summons itself is ten days, though it has been a question of doubt whether the Court has power to grant an extension of time if an application for such extension be made before the time fixed by the summons has expired, the Court has no power, after the time fixed by the summons for obtaining leave to appear and defend has expired, to extend the time (1) But see now notes to last rule It has been held that in an application for leave to appear and defend, the defendant cannot go into the question whether the summons was served on the date shown by the sheriff's return or not at all (2)

When there is no pretence for a defence the party sued should not be allowed to defend, and the plaintiff should have judgment as of course, but if the defendant has a real (it is not necessary to say a good) defence, he should have leave to appear and set it up As cases, however, sometimes occur where an apparently real defence is shown but its sincerity is doubtful there the defendant is let in to defend, only on the terms of his bringing the money into Court (3) It was held under the English Act that it was not necessary that there should be a defence on the merits, and that if the defendant appears and discloses any defence, legal or equitable he will be allowed to appear and defend (4) In a summary suit, if a defendant has been arrested before judgment and claims compensation under sect 95, he is entitled to apply for leave to defend, and if prima facie case is made out, leave should be given (5) Where there is a reason to doubt the bona fides of the defence, the condition of paying the money into Court, or giving security, will be imposed (6) In giving leave to defend, the Court has a discretion to order security for costs, not only where there is a doubt as to the bona fides of the defence but also where it appears unnecessary, though allowable (7) If the plaintiff has not been heard at first against the defendant's application, he will be allowed to apply to have the leave resumed (8) Where a conditional order is passed, but the condition is not performed the order is a nullity, and subsequent steps to set it aside are unnecessary (9)

4. After decree the Court may, under special circumstances, set aside the decree, and if necessary

Power to set aside decree stay or set aside execution, and may give leave to the defendant to appear to the summons and to defend the suit, if it seems reasonable to the Court so to do, and on such terms as the Court thinks fit

ORDER XXXVIII

Arrest and Attachment before Judgment

Arrest before judgment

1 Where at any stage of a suit, other than a suit of the nature referred to in section 16, clauses (a) to (d), the Court is satisfied, by affidavit or otherwise,—

Where defendant may be called upon to furnish security for appearance

(a) that the defendant, with intent to delay the plaintiff, or to avoid any process of the Court or to obstruct or delay the execution of any decree that may be passed against him,—

(i) has absconded or left the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, or

(ii) is about to abscond or leave the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, or

(iii) has disposed of or removed from the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court his property or any part thereof, or

(b) that the defendant is about to leave British India under circumstances affording reasonable probability that the plaintiff will or may thereby be obstructed or delayed in the execution of any decree that may be passed against the defendant in the suit, the Court may issue a warrant to arrest the defendant and bring him before the Court to show cause why he should not furnish security for his appearance

Provided that the defendant shall not be arrested if he pays to the officer entrusted with the execution of the warrant any sum specified in the warrant as sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim, and such sum shall be held in deposit by the Court until the suit is disposed of or until the further order of the Court

2. (1) Where the defendant fails to show such cause the Court shall order him either to deposit in Court money or other property sufficient to answer

the claim against him, or to furnish security for his appearance at any time when called upon while the suit is pending and until satisfaction of any decree that may be passed against him in the suit, or make such order as it thinks fit in regard to the sum which may have been paid by the defendant under the proviso to the last preceding rule

(2) Every surety for the appearance of a defendant shall bind himself, in default of such appearance, to pay any sum of money which the defendant may be ordered to pay in the suit

Application for security—These rules amalgamate sects 477, 478, 479 of the last Code. The object of the process in this and the following rules is to have some security for the execution of the decree when it is passed, and that the person of the defendant will be within reach at that time. A creditor is, however, not entitled, merely because he has a just demand against his debtor, to arrest him before judgment, (1) nor can a debtor be arrested simply to secure easy execution of the decree should one be obtained (2). The procedure is only intended to secure to a creditor his rights when it is shown that a debtor with one or other of the intentions (3) mentioned in r 1, has done or is about to do the acts mentioned in clauses (i), (ii), (iii), or is about to leave British India (4) under the circumstances stated. And if a creditor procures the arrest of his debtor without reasonable or probable cause, he renders himself liable to a suit for damages or to summary proceedings under sect 95. It is not the principles governing the English writ ne exeat regno which govern the matter, but the words of the Code (5).

Warrant—For a form of warrant of arrest before judgment, see First Schedule, Appendix F No I

Order to give security—In showing cause it may be shown that the suit is not a bona fide one, that the defendant has not done or is not about to do the acts charged in clauses (i), (ii), (iii) of r 1, or that he is not about to leave India or that, if he is about to leave, none of the circumstances mentioned exist, or that even if the suit is bona fide the institution of it has been vexatiously delayed till the defendant is about to depart from India in order to embarrass or coerce him (6). It has been held that the word "claim" in sect 479 of the last Code meant the amount of money claimed and that the security required to be given by a defendant who is arrested before judgment did not include security for costs (7).

3 (1) A surety for the appearance of a defendant may at any time apply to the Court in which he became such surety to be discharged from his obligation

Procedure on application by surety to be discharged

(2) On such application being made, the Court shall summon the defendant to appear or, if it thinks fit, may issue a warrant for his arrest in the first instance

(3) On the appearance of the defendant in pursuance of the summons or warrant, or on his voluntary surrender, the Court shall direct the surety to be discharged from his obligation, and shall call upon the defendant to find fresh security

4 Where the defendant fails to comply with any order under rule 2 or rule 3, the Court may commit him to the civil prison until the decision of the suit or, where a decree is passed against the defendant, until the decree has been satisfied Procedure where defendant fails to furnish security or find fresh security.

Provided that no person shall be detained in prison under this rule in any case for a longer period than six months, nor for a longer period than six weeks when the amount or value of the subject matter of the suit does not exceed fifty rupees

Provided also that no person shall be detained in prison under this rule after he has complied with such order appearance by a warrant to the jailor (2) The defendant is to be committed until the suit is decided or where a decree is passed against him until the decree has been executed. The words in the former Code were "until execution of the decree". These last words were somewhat obscure. It was said that they could not mean until steps were taken to execute the decree as such a construction would put an immense power of oppression into the hands of the judgment creditor. It was held therefore that execution meant complete execution—that is until possession was given to the plaintiff of what was ordered by the decree. An arrest therefore under this section became after decree an arrest until the decree was satisfied or wholly executed. It therefore became subject to the limitation as to time imposed by sect 312 (now 58) which forbade extension of such arrest beyond the period of six months (7) The amendment gives effect to this view commitment becomes one in execution, and that after judgment the debtor must have subsistence money or be released. S. 452 of the last Code however provided for subsistence money.

Attachment before judgment

[s 483] 5 (1) Where, at any stage of a suit, the Court is satisfied, by affidavit or otherwise, that the defendant, with intent to obstruct or delay the execution of any decree that may be passed against him,—

Where defendant may be called upon to furnish security for production of property

(a) is about to dispose of the whole or any part of his property, or

(b) is about to remove the whole or any part of his property from the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court,

[s 484] the Court may direct the defendant within a time to be fixed by it, either to furnish security, in such sum as may be specified in the order, to produce and place at the disposal of the Court, when required, the said property or the value of the same, or such portion thereof as may be sufficient to satisfy the decree, or to appear and show cause why he should not furnish security

[s 483, last para] (2) The plaintiff shall, unless the Court otherwise directs, specify the property required to be attached and the estimated value thereof

[s 484, last para] (3) The Court may also in the order direct the conditional attachment of the whole or any portion of the property so specified

Scope of rule—This rule corresponds with sects 81 and 83 of Act VIII of 1859, and amalgamates sects 483 and 484 of the last Code. Clause (b) of the former sect 483 has been omitted. The main object of an attachment before judgment is to enable the plaintiff to realize the amount of the decree, supposing a decree is eventually made, from the defendant's property. (1) Though an attachment before judgment is directed by r 7 to be made in the same manner as attachment in execution, the objects for which these two sorts of attachment are made are entirely different. An attachment prior to decree is not an attachment for the enforcement of the decree but it is a step taken merely for preventing the debtor from delaying or obstructing such enforcement when the decree subsequently passed is sought to be executed. (2) An attachment after decree is an attachment made for the immediate purpose of carrying the decree into execution, and it presupposes an application on the part of the decree holder to have his decree executed (1) The scope and object of this and the following rules are merely to protect a plaintiff against loss arising from the defendant making away with his property pending the suit. They do not ensure to the plaintiff payment, in any event, of whatever may be decreed to him. They do so only so far as that is ensured by preventing the defendant making away with property (2)

The application.—The jurisdiction given to Civil Courts to attach before judgment should be exercised with great discretion, and no Court should grant such an attachment on light grounds or unless it is perfectly satisfied by trustworthy evidence that the defendant is about to dispose of his property or to remove it from the jurisdiction of the Court (3) In all applications for attachment before judgment, there must be uberrima fides on the part of the plaintiff, and where the most perfect good faith is wanting the application should be rejected (4) The application can be made at any stage of the suit, but can be entertained only so long as the suit is pending (5) The facts mentioned in clauses (a) and (b) must have been done with the intent mentioned in the first paragraph, namely, to obstruct or delay the execution of any decree which might be passed (6) Clause (a) says, is “about to dispose of,” etc., therefore the section does not apply where the defendant has actually parted with the property (7) The section does not refer exclusively to moveable property but applies to immoveable property also (8) Where it was contended that the words in sect 484 of the last Code, “produce and place at the disposal of the Court” show that moveable property only can be attached it was held that the term “property,” as used in the section was wide enough to include property of every description, moveable and immoveable, whether in the actual possession of the defendant or of some other person on his behalf, and the words mentioned only referred to such property as is capable of being produced in Court (9) Attachment of property covers its profits (10) A Small Cause Court cannot, however, attach immoveable property (11) Where the property is the property in suit, an injunction should be obtained under O XXXIX r 1 clause (a) which may be enforced under r 2 of that order by imprisonment or attachment. And where the property is not that in suit, an alternative remedy is given under r 1 of the same order, clause (b), where the word “property” is not confined to property within the jurisdiction or to property which is in dispute in the suit (12) This rule has no application in divorce proceedings (13)

Property without the jurisdiction—It was held under the last Code both that the section did not (1) and did (2) apply where the property sought to be attached was beyond the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit was pending. A Court which cannot attach primarily in execution of its decree cannot attach in anticipation of it. It was therefore held under the Code of 1859, that a Court of Small Causes could not attach immoveable property under this section (3). This is the law now. It was held that the Court had jurisdiction where the property was a chose in action due from the Collector who, like the judgment debtor, resided within the jurisdiction of the attaching Court (4).

Effect of attachment—See notes to next rule.

Call for security—For form of order calling for security, see Sched I, App F, No 5. As to whether property beyond the jurisdiction can be attached under this rule, see last paragraph but one. Cause can be shown after security has been furnished to avoid attachment (5). Sect 145, ante applies to sureties under this rule (6). An order under sect 483 of the last Code was not one of those in respect of which an appeal was given under sect 588 of that Code (7) though an appeal lay from an order of attachment under the following section. An appeal lies under the present section (see O XLIII r 1 (g)). The words "produce and place at the disposal of the Court" refer only to such property as is capable of being produced in Court (8).

"Conditional attachment."—"Conditional attachment" might mean an attachment to be made conditionally on the security not being furnished or cause shown by the prescribed day, or it might mean an immediate attachment of a provisional kind conditioned to become plenary if security should not be furnished or cause shown according to the terms of the order. The form shows that the latter was the intention of the Legislature (9).

property specified, or such portion thereof as appears sufficient to satisfy any decree which may be passed in the suit, be attached.

(2) Where the defendant shows such cause or furnishes the required security, and the property specified or any portion of it has been attached, the Court shall order the attachment to be withdrawn, or make such other order as it thinks fit

Order of attachment.—This rule corresponds with sect 84 of the Code of 1859. It is only on the defendant's failure to show cause or furnish security that attachment can be made. So the latter cannot be ordered unless security has first been demanded (1) and on one or other of the grounds stated in r 5 ante (2). As to the form of an order under this section, see Sched I, App F, No 7. An appeal lies from it (3).

Effect of attachment.—The property in the goods attached is in no wise altered by the attachment, but remains as before in the defendant. The Court, as it were, locks up the goods, so that they cannot be disposed of or carried away in any mode that would delay or defeat the execution of the decree if obtained (4). There is nothing in the Code which makes an attaching creditor a secured creditor, or creates any charge or lien in his favour over the property attached. The order does not purport to deal with any question of title. In other words, attachment prevents alienation, it does not confer title. The making of an order of attachment only operates so as to give the judgment creditor certain rights in execution (5). It has always been held that an attachment before judgment conferred on the plaintiff no right prior to that of the Official Assignee (6). And it makes no difference whether the vesting order is before or after decree, for it cannot be contended that a decree qua decree simply constitutes the judgment creditor a secured creditor, or gives him any charge or lien over the property of the judgment debtor (7). Under however, the Code of 1859, an attachment, previous to the date of the vesting order, in the execution of a decree, conferred on the judgment creditor a right prior to that of the Official Assignee (1) This was so because under that Code the first attaching creditor had priority over other judgment creditors But no such priority is now allowed In fact, there is now no question of priority in a matter of this description, for under sect 295 (now 73) all decree holders who have applied for execution of their decrees for money against the same judgment debtor before the realization of assets from him are entitled to rateable distribution (2) As already stated an attachment creates no lien Whether the attachment be before or after judgment, all creditors are entitled to share rateably, subject to the provisions of sect 73 An attaching creditor has no exclusive claim until a sale at his instance has actually taken place The amendments of the law of procedure in this country have been based upon the principle that so far as possible the creditors should be treated pari passu, and that nothing short of actual realization of the debt due should give rights of priority (3)

Save and except in the two classes of cases mentioned in rr 9 and 10, the intention of the Legislature was that an attachment before judgment should be fully operative The effect of such an attachment, whether made before or after a decree is the same, provided that in the former case a decree is made for the plaintiff at whose instance the attachment takes place Therefore though there is no distinct provision such as that which is to be found in sect 64, any private alienation of property attached before judgment during the continuance of the attachment is void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment (4) An attachment does not affect rights of strangers See r 10, post Where an attachment under the former section, issued by a Court at the instance of a third party, prohibited the creditor from recovering and the debtor from paying the debt, it was held that an order on those terms was not an order staying the institution of a suit within the meaning of sect 15 of the Limitation Act (5)

7. Save as otherwise expressly provided, the attachment shall be made in the manner provided for the attachment of property in execution of a decree

8 Where any claim is preferred to property attached before judgment, such claim shall be investigated in the manner hereinbefore provided for the investigation of claims to property attached in execution of a decree for the payment of money

Claims to attached property—This rule corresponds with sect 86 of the Code of 1859 (1) The order dealing with the investigation of claims is O XXI rr 58-63, which must therefore be applied to cases of attachment before judgment (2) In the last-mentioned case it was said that this section, which prescribes the manner of investigation, is silent as to the result, the Court apparently considering that the sections following sect 278 of the last Code had not been applied But however this may be, if the defendant has ceased to have any interest in the property, as where a vesting order in insolvency has been made, it is clear that the attachment ought to be raised for when the law directs the claim to be investigated it implies that if the claim is made good the attachment, which was intended merely to preserve the defendant's interest from the effect of private alienations, shall come to an end (3) The omission to object to the validity of the attachment, on the ground that property sought to be attached is not transferable at the time when the application is made for attachment before judgment, does not operate as a bar to the investigation of the objection when an application has been made for execution of the decree made in the suit (4)

9. Where an order is made for attachment before judgment, the Court shall order the attachment to be withdrawn when the defendant furnishes the security required, together with security for the costs of the attachment, or when the suit is dismissed.

Removal of attachment—This rule, which corresponds to sect 87 of the Code of 1859, indicates that in the event of the suit not being dismissed or decreed, the attachment shall subsist, and save in the case mentioned in this rule and in the next, the intention of the Legislature was that an attachment before judgment should be fully operative (5) For the former words 'the Court which passed the order shall remove' have been substituted the words italicized.

rights, existing prior to the attachment, of persons not parties to the suit, nor bar any person holding a decree against the defendant from applying for the sale of the property under attachment in execution of such decree

Rights of third parties—The attachment does not by this rule (1) affect the rights of persons not parties to the suit. Therefore the rights of rival creditors cannot be affected by it (2) But these rights must now exist prior to the attachment (3) The attachment does not prevent the property being sold in execution of another decree, whether that decree has been obtained before or after the attachment (4) The main object of the attachment before judgment being to prevent the defendant from disposing of or removing his property from the jurisdiction this rule, it has been said, proves that this prevention is not intended merely for the benefit of the attaching creditor, but may enure also to the benefit of other persons (5) Though one person may have secured the goods another decree holder may apply for the sale of them (6) In a recent case in the Bombay High Court, where the plaintiff had obtained a money decree against a Mitakshara coparcener, after having obtained attachment before judgment of certain joint-property, and the debtor had died before execution it was held on appeal that a subsequent application to execute the decree had been rightly dismissed, since an attachment before judgment is merely precautionary and creates no charge, and so could not defeat another coparcener's title by survivorship (7) As to insolvency, see notes to r 6, ante object is to ensure to a plaintiff payment of his decree. Although they do not ensure this in any event, they do so only so far as that is ensured by preventing the defendant making away with property (1). In other words, the attachment does not of necessity ensure the property to the person who attaches it, provided only he eventually gets a decree. The plaintiff must not only wait until he has obtained a decree, but he is not competent to proceed against the property attached until he has taken the preliminary steps the law requires for its enforcement (2). He must, in other words, apply for execution just like any other creditor (3). This is now made clear by the addition of the words "upon an application for execution of such decree". When, however, an application for execution is made, by the terms of this rule no application for attachment is attachment in execution is that on which application for execution is made (5). It has been held that an attachment before judgment cannot be regarded as the inception of an execution, or as binding the goods in such a manner as to exclude the right of a third party (such as the Official Assignee) accruing after such attachment, but before judgment and warrant for execution (6).

in execution of decrees necessitated a similar exemption from attachment before judgment. It was considered, however, that there were practical difficulties in the way of adopting the same procedure, and an agriculturalist possessing a growing crop is unlikely to abscond, and unable, except at maturity, to remove it. It has therefore been thought that the attachment of growing crops before judgment was productive of hardship, and that there was no sufficient reason for its retention.

ORDER XXXIX.

Temporary Injunctions and Interlocutory Orders.

Temporary Injunctions

(a) that any property in dispute in a suit is in danger of being wasted, damaged or alienated by any party to the suit, or wrongfully sold in execution of a decree, or

- (b) that the defendant threatens, or intends, to remove or dispose of his property with a view to defraud his creditors, the Court may by order grant a temporary injunction to restrain such act, or make such other order for the purpose of staying and preventing the wasting, damaging, alienation, sale, removal or disposition of the property as the Court thinks fit, until the disposal of the suit or until further orders

2. (1) In any suit for restraining the defendant from committing a breach of contract or other injury of any kind, whether compensation is claimed in the suit or not, the plaintiff may,

at any time after the commencement of the suit, and either before or after judgment, apply to the Court for a temporary injunction to restrain the defendant from committing the breach of contract or injury complained of, or any breach of contract or injury of a like kind arising out of the same contract or relating to the same property or right

(2) The Court may by order grant such injunction, on such terms as to the duration of the injunction, keeping an account, giving security, or otherwise, as the Court thinks fit

(3) In case of disobedience, or of breach of any such terms, the Court granting an injunction may order the property of the person guilty of such disobedience or breach to be attached and may also order such person to be detained in the civil prison for a term not exceeding six months, unless in the meantime the Court directs his release.

(1) No attachment under this rule shall remain in force for more than one year, at the end of which time, if the disobedience or breach continues, the property attached may be sold, and out of the proceeds the Court may award such compensation as it thinks fit, and shall pay the balance, if any, to the party entitled thereto.

Injunctions—An injunction is a judicial process, whereby a party is required to do or to refrain from doing a particular thing according to the exigency of the order (1) Remedies for the non performance of a duty are either compensatory, that is by an award of damages (a remedy which is often useless or inadequate), or specific, that is by taking away the option to pay damages for non-performance and compelling the party in default to do or forbear the very thing which he is bound to do or forbear under sanction of the penalty, in case of disobedience, of imprisonment or attachment of his property, or both (2) The issue of an injunction is then a form of specific relief. It is preventive relief. The exercise of the jurisdiction to grant relief is not ex debito justitiæ, but a matter of discretion, though such discretion is not arbitrary, but guided by judicial principles and capable of correction by a Court of appeal (3) It is granted quia timet, that is because the party fears some future probable inquiry. It is, of course, therefore, not necessary that a wrong should have been actually committed before the Court will interfere (4) The best guides in the matter of interference have been judicially stated to be the principles which determine the action of Courts of Equity in England, (5) though the peculiar circumstances of the country are also to be considered (6) Injunctions are either perpetual or temporary. The perpetual injunction is a decree. Such an injunction is regulated by the Specific Relief Act (7) Temporary injunctions are granted by interlocutory order at any period of a suit, and being intended merely to preserve the status quo pending the decision, are regulated as procedure by the Code. Apart, however, from the special circumstances which determine whether the Court should, in its discretion, grant an injunction before the hearing of the suit, the same general principles must equally apply to the granting of a temporary, as to a perpetual, injunction, and these principles must, therefore, be sought in the Specific Relief Act itself (8) This statement has been qualified (9)

So it has been held that sect 56 of the Specific Relief Act does not affect injunctions in restraint of sale in execution under sect 142 (now r 1) of the Code, (1) whilst, on the other hand, the precise terms of that section (though it is submitted erroneously) (2) have been held to exclude the grant of an injunction in a case not falling within its express provisions. (3)

An injunction, whether perpetual or temporary, may be mandatory, that is, framed to compel the performance of a positive act, or non mandatory, that is, a negative prohibition against the doing of a particular act (4)

The subject-matter of an injunction is the actual or threatened infringement of some legal right. The grant is not limited to cases of injury to property. So the publication of libel or injury to personal status may be restrained. (5) The subject matter is more particularly stated in the Code of Specific Relief Act. It may be classified as follows. (A) Injunctions in respect of Civil Judicial Proceedings being either actions or proceedings in execution, (B) in respect of acts not being Judicial Proceedings, viz, in the case of obligations arising from (a) contract, (b) trust, (c) in tort

An injunction will only be issued in favour of the person or persons whose legal right has been infringed, and against persons against whom the claim of the plaintiff is, in fact, rightly laid, provided they be within the reach of the Court, amenable to its jurisdiction, and bearing such a character as renders them personally so amenable (6). In so far as it is a remedy against an individual it will be issued only in respect of acts done by him against whom it is sought to be enforced. So an injunction cannot be obtained against executors on account of acts done by their testator though they may be restrained in respect of acts done by themselves. Nor does an injunction run with the land (7). And it has been held that in a representative suit an injunction will only be binding on those who are parties to the record (8).

The essentials to the grant of relief by way of injunction are (a) relief cannot be granted merely to enforce a penal law, (b) there must be a civil (9) pending action in which it may be granted (c) the cognizance of the suit itself must not be barred, and (d) the Court must otherwise have jurisdiction to try the suit (1) As to this, "Equity acts in personam," that is, the Court's directions are addressed to the defendant personally, and they are not regarded as directly affecting the subject-matter in dispute. The application of the maxim in India is subject to the statute. The Code (2) has given to Mofussil Courts the power to act in personam. The Presidency High Courts under their Charters have a similar, but in terms less restricted, jurisdiction (3). Injunctions may be granted by all Civil Courts with the exception of Presidency and Provincial Small Cause Courts. The jurisdiction may be exercised either by a Court of first instance, or of appeal (4). The Court of first instance has, before appeal, no jurisdiction to grant an injunction after the claim is dismissed, and it has no jurisdiction after the appeal has been admitted to issue an injunction during the pendency of the appeal. Nor a fortiori when a suit for an injunction is dismissed, can the Court which dismisses such suit take upon itself to stay by injunction the execution of a decree passed in another suit (5). The Appellate Court has the same power in respect of the grant of an injunction as the first Court had (6). The Court may also interfere in revision (7).

(9) In Malharao Deshwant v Maniklal Munshanlar 2 Bom L R 97 (1900) the Court stated that it was unnecessary to decide whether s 647 of the last Code extended 492 of that Code to proceedings under the Probate Act of 1831 but that the Court should, in preference follow the special powers given in s 34 of that Act

The High Courts may enforce these orders by proceedings for contempt (8) and the Code (r 2) invests Courts with power to compel obedience (9). The Code has also provided for the enforcement of decrees granting permanent injunctions (10). An injunction operates from the date of the order being made and not from the time of the sealing of the writ or even from the time of its being drawn up, and a party who has notice of an order is bound by it from the time it is pronounced. An injunction must, however erroneous it may be, be obeyed until it is discharged. It has, however, no effect in altering the rights of property (11).

Though the issue of an injunction is a matter of discretion, the latter is governed by certain general judicial principles (12). As an injunction is not to be arbitrarily refused where a proper case for its issue is made out, so it is not to be granted merely on the ground that it can do no harm (13). The subject-matter of a temporary injunction is the protection of legal rights pendens litigation. Its object is to prevent future injury, leaving matters as far as possible in statu quo until the suit in all its bearings can be heard and determined (1) In exercising jurisdiction the Court does not pretend to determine the legal rights, but merely keeps the property in its actual condition until the legal title can be established. It interferes on the assumption that the party who seeks its interference has the legal right which he asserts, but needs the aid of the Court for the protection of the legal right or of the property in question until the legal right can be ascertained. The Court upon an application for a temporary injunction will deal with the injunction upon the evidence before it, and will confine itself strictly to the immediate object sought and as far as possible abstain from prejudging the question in the cause (2) A temporary injunction is thus not decisive upon the merits, whilst a perpetual injunction being in effect a decree, is conclusive upon all parties in interest.

The general rules governing the grant of relief are (a) the applicant must show a fair prima facie case in support of the right claimed, (3) (b) and an actual or threatened violation of that right, (4) (c) productive of irreparable or at least serious damage. (5) So a temporary injunction will not be granted to restrain a wrong which is a mere technical invasion of the plaintiff's rights and does not threaten serious injury (6) As has been concisely said the Court will not grant an injunction unless real injury is apprehended (7) (d) The applicant's conduct should be such as not to disentitle him to assistance. It should be fair and honest and free from acquiescence or delay (8) A less degree of acquiescence or delay will bar relief on an interlocutory application than at the final hearing. Apart from the fact that delay is calculated to throw doubt upon the reality of the alleged injury, it is not really material unless it has prejudiced the defendant (9) (e) There must be a greater convenience in granting than in refusing the injunction (10) Where however there is a right it cannot, it has been said, be limited by the religious prejudices of neighbours (1) (f) Lastly, equally efficacious relief must not be obtainable by any other usual remedy except in case of breach of trust (2) In a recent case it was held that in deciding whether to grant a temporary injunction the Court should consider whether there was a substantial question pending decision as to the rights of the parties, and whether the nature of that question was such that it was proper that an injunction should meanwhile be granted and whether there would be a greater convenience in granting it (3)

With certain exceptions the aforementioned principles apply equally to perpetual as well as to temporary injunctions. These exceptions are that whereas upon an application for a temporary injunction the plaintiff is required merely to show a clear prima facie case, in order to obtain a grant of a perpetual injunction, the legal right must have been established as well as the fact of its actual or threatened violation productive of serious damage (4) In the case of alleged acquiescence a stronger case must be made than would be a bar upon an interlocutory application

A mandatory injunction, that is, an order compelling a defendant to restore things to the condition in which they were at the time when the plaintiff's complaint was made may be either temporary or perpetual, and, generally speaking, the principles regulating its grant are those which are applicable to preventive injunctions, temporary or perpetual as the case may be (5) It has, however, been doubted by one of the Judges in a recent case in the Bombay High Court whether a mandatory injunction can in strictness be considered as a temporary injunction under this rule (6) Prompt action is essential if a mandatory injunction is the desired remedy (7) to see whether the operation of an injunction has been interfered with, regard must be had to the terms of the injunction itself. If it has been disobeyed, then proceedings in the matter of the contempt will lie against those in active disobedience and those who abet them. The High Courts have all the powers of a Court of Equity in England for enforcing these decrees in personam. This jurisdiction has not been affected by the Code (1). It has been held that a District Court is not a Court of Record, and as such has no inherent power to commit for contempt (2). However this may be, the Code gives powers which according to the last cited case are only exerciseable when the Court is put in motion by a party who deems himself aggrieved. Sub rule (3) has been remodelled. See Bombay decision, cited (3). The Code, while providing a specific penalty for the breach of an injunction, does not provide that one of the penalties which result from infringement is that any dealing with property the subject of an injunction contrary to its terms is illegal and void. The words of the rule are not to be read as providing for any other penalty than that which is therein specially mentioned (4). Sect. 188 of the Penal Code does not apply to an order made by way of injunction in a civil suit between party and party (5).

As an injunction operates from the date of the order being made, a party may be committed for the disobedience of an order between the date it is made and the date of its issue, the reason being that if the rule were otherwise the party against whom the order was made would have all that time during which he might defeat it (6). A party, therefore, who has notice of an order, is bound by it from the time it is pronounced, and any means of information whereby notice is actually received is sufficient. It not being requisite that a defendant should be officially apprised of the injunction or be served with process in order to render him liable for contempt (7).

In order to decide whether there has been an actual breach of the injunction, it is important to observe the objects for which the relief was granted as well as the circumstances attending it. The violation of the spirit of an injunction even though its strict letter may not have been disregarded, is a breach of the Court's orders (8). On the other hand, when the conduct complained of although literally a breach of the injunction, is not so in spirit and where defendants have acted in good faith and there is no evidence of any intention on their part to violate the order, they will be held guiltless (9). It is however, no answer for a defendant to say that he has acted under advice (10). Only the person against whom an injunction is issued may be committed for its breach, but a person who with knowledge of an injunction against a particular person, aids and assists that person to commit a breach of the injunction may himself be committed for contempt though not for breach of the injunction (1) As regards permanent injunctions, they are decrees, and are enforceable as such (2)

Appeal, Review, Revision—An appeal lies from an order under rr 1, 2, 4 See O XLIII r 1 (r) And it has been held that since an order under r 1 means any order passed under r 1, and since under that rule a Court has the power of refusing an injunction, an appeal lies against an order refusing an injunction (3) It is essential to prove a wrong exercise of discretion (4) But in the under mentioned cases (5) a second appeal was held not to lie It has been held that no appeal lies from an order refusing to grant an injunction without notice (6) A permanent injunction is appealable as a decree (7) The Court may, under sect 115, revise an order, (8) or under sect 114, review (9) Where on an application for the issue of a temporary injunction the Court ordered the defendants to furnish security, it was held that this was not an order under r 1 of this rule, and was not appealable under O XLIII r 1 (10)

Damage or alienation, waste—Sometimes an injunction, whether temporary or perpetual, is the instrument by which the Court specifically enforces the obligation if arising on contract, or specifically restrains the violation of those other obligations which are the subjects of the law of tort In other cases a temporary injunction is merely incident or ancillary to the general relief in this sense that it seeks merely to preserve the status quo, enjoining interference pendente lite by waste, damage or alienation with the subject of litigation or the fraudulent disposition of his property by a party defendant to a suit These two rules regulate the grant of temporary injunctions, the latter relating to temporary injunctions in cases of contract or tort, the former relating to injunctions against interference with the subject of litigation here spoken of as injunctions pendente lite

In the case of injunctions in matters of contract and tort, it is not necessary to separately consider temporary and perpetual injunctions in cases of contract, for the kinds of cases, whether of contract or tort, in which an injunction, either temporary or perpetual, may be granted, do not differ from each other If the case, as alleged, be such that at the hearing a perpetual injunction would not be granted, then clearly a temporary injunction ought not to be granted before the hearing, though of course, it does not follow that a temporary injunction will be granted before the hearing, in every case in which a perpetual injunction might fitly be granted at the hearing, for to justify a temporary injunction, not only must the case be such that an injunction is the appropriate relief but there must be the further ingredient that, unless the defendant is at once restrained by injunction, irreparable injury or inconvenience may result to the plaintiff before the suit can be decided upon its merits.

In the limited class of cases which are now to be considered, the injunctions are always from the nature of the case of a temporary character, and must thus be separately considered.

Injunctions may thus be roughly divided into (A) injunctions whether temporary or perpetual in cases of (a) contract or (b) tort (r 2) and (B) temporary injunctions against (a) interference with the subject matter of litigation or (b) fraudulent disposition of property pending litigation (r 1).

The power given by r 1, clause (a), is substantially the same as that long exercised by English Courts of Equity. The object is to restrain the defendant from doing anything which may prevent the property remaining in statu quo during the pendency of a suit, upon the principle that when the plaintiff seeks to recover property in specie the defendant shall not be allowed to decide the question in his own favour by dealing or making away with the property the right to which is the question in dispute. So the Court will restrain not only waste or damage to the subject of litigation whether moveable or immoveable property, but may also restrain the mere alienation of property whether moveable or immoveable. For in every case the plaintiff might be put to the expense of making the vendor a party to the proceeding, and at all events his title if he prevails in the action, may be embarrassed by such new outstanding title under the transfer (1). The Court, even though it acts on the doctrine of lis pendens will prevent, if possible, the necessity of proceeding on such a principle and will not in a proper case deprive a suitor of the more effective protection of an injunction (2). This clause deals with suits in which a claim is made for specific property in the hands of the defendants, and it is only in such suits that any question can arise of waste, damage or alienation. The object of the exercise of the jurisdiction is to secure the safety of that specific property which is in dispute in the suit pending the litigation, as also at its close to secure that any decree which may be made with reference thereto shall not prove unfructuous (3).

The power, however, of issuing an injunction pendente lite ought to be most cautiously exercised. It is only in cases where property, which it is essential should be kept in its existing condition during the pendency of the suit, is in danger of being destroyed, damaged, or put beyond the power of the Court, that the latter ought to interfere so as to restrain persons who may turn out in the final event of the litigation to be the actual owners of the property from proper enjoyment and possession of it (4).

Immoveable property should always, if possible, be retained in statu quo, until the suit which is to determine the title to it shall have been decided (1)

The restraint imposed need not necessarily be absolute, but should be such as the circumstances require. So where the subject matter of the injunction comprised mortgage bonds and Government promissory notes the order of injunction while prohibiting any alienation of or dealing with the bonds or notes by the defendant, permitted him to sue upon the mortgage bond and take steps to realize the amount covered thereby, and ordered the money when realized to be kept in Court, until the disposal of the suit, and as regards the promissory notes permitted him to draw the interest as it fell due from time to time (2)

In granting a temporary injunction restraining the alienation of property, the subject of suit, the Court will, as in the case of other injunctions, first see that there is a bona fide contention between the parties, and then on which side, in the event of obtaining a successful result to the suit, will be the balance of inconvenience (3) if the injunction do not issue, bearing in mind the principle (already alluded to) of retaining immoveable property in statu quo (4)

The wrongful sale of property in execution of a decree is only one form of alienation which may be restrained pendente lite (5). Even a judicial sale, if wrongful will be restrained upon principles and circumstances which are hereafter dealt with.

In order to obtain an injunction under the rule there must be, (a) a suit in which the injunction may be granted, (b) and (b) the threatened danger of waste damage or alienation must be alleged and proved; (7) (c) in respect of property which is in dispute in that suit (8)

"Wrongfully sold in execution"—This is one of several forms of injunction in restraint of judicial proceedings (9). Prior to the Specific Relief Act the High Court restrained by injunction proceedings to be instituted and pending, as also proceedings not instituted but threatened, and prohibited the execution of decrees which had been or might be obtained (10). The matter is now as regards permanent injunctions governed by the Specific Relief Act and as regards temporary injunctions in part by the Code. An opinion has been expressed that temporary injunctions are limited to matters mentioned in sections 492 and 493 (now rr 1 and 2) of the Code. And on this ground the Court refused an interlocutory injunction restraining the defendant proceeding with a suit filed by the defendant against the plaintiff in the Small Cause Court until the hearing of a suit in the High Court in which an application for an injunction was made (11). But this case has been dissented from (12). It seems anomalous that a perpetual injunction may be granted, but not an interlocutory one, where to refuse it may be to make the proposed decree unfructuous. An injunction in respect of civil judicial proceedings may have reference to an action or to proceedings taken in execution of a decree obtained therein. R 1 deals with the particular case of wrongful sale in execution, a provision which was not contained in the Code of 1859. Sect. 56 of the Specific Relief Act was not intended to and does not affect temporary injunctions applied for under sect. 492 (now r 1) against the wrongful sale of property in execution of a decree. Therefore a subordinate Court may issue an injunction restraining proceedings in execution pending before a superior Court (1).

The law does not say that a property is, or is about, to be wrongfully sold, but that it is in danger of being wrongfully sold (2). These words are wide enough to include (3) and the section is, in fact, most commonly applicable to claims in execution made under O XXI r 58. If a claimant under that rule, whose claim has been disallowed, institutes a regular suit against the decree-holder, the Court has power to grant an injunction staying the sale pending the decision of the suit (4). And the Code having been amended so as to admit of the grant of an interlocutory injunction in such a case, the procedure indicated by the rule should be followed, and a sale should, in case of applications by third parties, be restrained by injunction in the suit brought to try the title, and not by the order of the Court executing the decree (5). And in the execution of a decree ordering the sale of property, it is not competent for a Court to refuse to sell it because a stranger who is in possession of such property impeaches the decree, the course open to him if he wishes a stay of execution being to file a suit and obtain an injunction for that purpose (6). But though where property is in danger of wrongful sale the Court may issue an injunction restraining the defendant from enforcing his decree against the property, yet when the Court dismisses the suit in which the injunction is sought and has been granted, it has no right to further restrain the defendant from executing upon the mere possibility of the Appellate Court reversing its decree. Once the suit is dismissed the Court has, in point of law, no power at all to deal with the proceedings in the suit in which execution has issued (7). Upon the dismissal of a suit for an injunction restraining the sale, the Appellate Court may issue a temporary injunction restraining the decree holder from proceeding with execution pending the appeal, (8) and the application may be granted subject to the terms of the

And as applications under that Order and clause (f) are both distinguishable from an application under clause (a), so also, applications under that Order and clause (f) respectively are clearly distinguishable from each other. been held by the Allahabad High Court that the term "sue" in the Code (1) does not include the exercise of a Court of Revenue and that therefore the application of rule 10 in execution of a decree of a Court of Revenue is a suit under sect. 3 of Act VII of 1859 and can be entertained by a Civil Court (2).

Fraudulent disposition of property—This provision is based on the principle laid down in clause (1) in that the property dealt with by the injunction is not the property in dispute in the suit, it is only that which the parties lay claim to the title to which has to be decided. It is property whether movable or immovable (3) the title to which is about to be decided in the defendant's favour in dispute in the suit. It presupposes a general intention on the part of the defendant to defraud and to fraud his creditors and permits of an injunction and goes to the remedy of attachment before judgment (4). The ordinary rule is that, pending a suit to enforce a general claim against a person there cannot be an injunction to restrain him from parting or dealing with his property, not being property specifically in dispute in the suit (5). When however such an act of parting and dealing with property is not done in the bona fide exercise of own right but with an intent to defraud persons who being creditors of the owner, have, or might have the right to resort to such property in satisfaction of their claim, there arises in their behalf an equity to restrain such threatened dealing with the property even as against its legal owner. Both an attachment under O XXXVIII r. 6 and an injunction under this clause have as their subject matter not the property in suit but the property of the defendant, therefore applications under these provisions are clearly distinguishable from an application for an injunction under clause (a) against the waste, damage and alienation of property which is in dispute in the suit. And as applications under that Order and clause (1) are both distinguishable from an application under clause (a) so also applications under that Order and clause (1) respectively, are clearly distinguishable from each other. O XXXVIII r. 6 is applicable only to cases where it is probable that the defendant is about to make away with his property so as to make it impossible for the plaintiff to execute any possible decree against him and empowers the Court in such a case to make an order calling upon the defendant for security and, in default thereof, to attach the property. It has no application where the property is the property in suit, which must if necessary, be followed under the provisions of r. 1, clause (a). The latter provision applies to a case where it is shown to the satisfaction of the Court that the defendant in possession is likely to damage and make away with any property in dispute in the suit, and empowers the Court in such a case to issue an injunction to the defendant to refrain from the particular act complained of (6). But though O XXXVIII r. 6 and r. 1, clause (b), of this Order have both this in common, that the property to be dealt with by the Court is not that in dispute in the suit, the following important differences exist between these provisions. In the first place, the property is actually attached in the one case, while in the other the property is left in the owner's hands, subject only to the prohibition enjoined by the injunction. Secondly, the provisions as to attachment are generally limited to property sufficient to satisfy the decree which may be passed in the suits in which the application for attachment is made.

whereas an injunction, in so far as its action is in personam, is not so limited. Lastly, any private alienation made subsequent to attachment is null and void, but such is not the case with alienations made subsequent to the issue of an injunction either under clause (a) or (b) of the first rule (2).

"Breach of contract"—See Woodroffe on Injunctions, Ch. VI, where the subject is fully considered. Whether or not there has been a breach of contract in any particular case depends on the facts of that case, and the substantive law governing it. The ordinary remedy for such breach is damages. Extraordinary remedies are specific performance, rescission, cancellation, receiver and injunction. With this last relief in its temporary form, the Order alone deals. The Court will interfere by injunction, to prevent the violation of contracts and to compel parties to perform their covenants and agreements by injunction temporary or perpetual, mandatory or otherwise. Certain common conditions are essential to the grant of this relief, viz (a) the Court must be one of competent jurisdiction (3) to grant the relief prayed, (b) the agreement must constitute a contract, (4) (c) such contract must not be one the performance of which would not be specifically enforced, (5) for injunctions respecting contracts must be governed by rules relating to specific performance (6). Where an agreement is of an affirmative character, the remedy lies in specific performance and an injunction may also be granted both for the enforcement of negative terms, if any, and also in aid of and ancillary to the relief sought by way of specific performance of the contract. If, however, an agreement, though of an affirmative character, is such that the Court would not specifically enforce it, no injunction will be issued to prevent the breach thereof (7) except in certain cases of negative agreements coupled with affirmative

(26) The decision in Darab Kuar v Gomti Kuar, 22 A 443 (1900), that the section does not apply to cases of injury in tort and acts of trespass, is clearly erroneous.

94] 3 The Court shall in all cases, except where it appears that the object of granting the injunction would be defeated by the delay, before granting an injunction, direct notice of the application for the same to be given to the opposite party.

98] 4 Any order for an injunction may be discharged, or varied, or set aside by the Court, on application made thereto by any party dissatisfied with such order.

Order for injunction may be discharged, varied or set aside.

Practice Notice—The present Order contains the practice as regards temporary injunctions. The practice as regards perpetual injunctions is the same as that which governs the making of decrees generally (1) Injunctions are granted upon suit, and should as a rule be specifically prayed for when the obtaining of this form of relief is a substantial object of the action. In urgent cases application for an injunction may be made ex parte without notice and before or after appearance. As, however, enacted by r 3, notice as a general rule must be given to the opposite party. The power to issue an ex parte injunction no doubt exists, but the greatest care should be employed in its exercise, and only in cases where considerable mischief might ensue if the issue of the process were delayed until notice was given (2) If the Court be of opinion, upon an application ex parte, that the case is not so urgent as to require its immediate interference, it will either grant a rule nisi or order notice of the application to be served on the defendant. Where an injunction is granted without notice the party aggrieved may apply either to have it discharged under r 4 or he may appeal, (3) though the former appears to be the more proper course. No appeal lies from an order refusing an injunction. Where an application is made by motion for a rule nisi, the defendant

Instead of issuing an injunction in the first instance the Court may grant an interim order (5) which is really an order in the nature of an injunction granted when the plaintiff, not showing quite a case for an ex parte injunction without more, shows a case for giving short notice of motion for an injunction and for protection in the meantime.

An interim order and a rule nisi may be, and ordinarily are, granted at the same time. In the case of every application it must be proved either (as is usually the case) by affidavit, or otherwise that sufficient grounds exist for the grant of the relief claimed (1) The defendant's admission may, of course be sufficient. (2) Particular care must be taken to state all material facts fully and fairly in applications for an ex parte injunction (3) such as injury (4) defendant's intention to waste, damage, alienate, or to commit some other threatened injury (5)

If sufficient prima facie evidence is given the Court may either grant an injunction absolutely or as provided for in r 2 on terms It may require the plaintiff or defendant to enter into terms as a condition of withholding an injunction The most usual undertaking is to require a plaintiff as a condition of the Court's interference in his favour to abide by any order which it may make as to damages (6) The undertaking is ordinarily given by Counsel or pleader on behalf of the party for whom he appears, or by the party appearing in person and forms part of the order of injunction

In some cases the motion for a temporary injunction is treated as a trial of the action, and the hearing of the cause is not proceeded with, the injunction being by consent made perpetual on the motion In cases, however, where relief, additional to that by injunction, is sought, such a course is not feasible, and the trial proceeds, when upon judgment the injunction is made permanent or dissolved If upon judgment the action is dismissed, any injunction which may have been granted goes as a matter of course An injunction which has been granted upon an interlocutory application is superseded by the judgment in the action If it is intended that it should remain in force it must be expressly continued.

Discharge, Variance and Dissolution A marked feature of temporary injunctions, as distinguished from those which are final or perpetual, is that the former are liable to be dissolved on notice upon sufficient cause shown at any stage of the proceedings after, or perhaps even before, the coming in of the answer (7) The application should be made on motion at any time before the hearing of the cause in which it was granted, (8) and before the Court by which the injunction was granted,(1) unless the cause has been transferred, when the application may be made to that Court to which the cause has become attached. The same rules of pleading and evidence apply both to applications for the grant and dissolution of injunctions. The injunction will either be continued or dissolved according to the merits as disclosed by the pleadings and the preponderance of the evidence.

If an injunction obtained ex parte is set aside on the ground of concealment of material facts,(2) or an injunction granted on notice is set aside as having been issued on insufficient grounds (3) the plaintiff may apply again if he can make out a sufficient case.

An appeal lies under O XLIII r 1 (r) from an order under this rule, the appeal not being limited to an affirmative but including also a negative order (4).

Compensation for issue of injunction.—This in the last Code was dealt with in sect 197, which is now incorporated in sect 93, which see.

- 98] 6 The Court may, on the application of any party to a suit, order the sale, by any person named in such order, and in such manner and on such terms as it thinks fit, of any moveable property, being the subject matter of such suit, or attached before judgment in such suit, which is subject to speedy and natural decay, or which for any other just and sufficient cause it may be desirable to have sold at once.
- Power to order interim sale.*

Sale of perishable articles—The benefit of the provisions of sect 498 of the last Code should plainly be claimable in the case of attachment before judgment, and the section has accordingly been so amended. Words have been added so as to empower the Court to order a sale of securities where the state of the market requires such a course.

 (b) for all or any of the purposes aforesaid authorize any person to enter upon or into any land or building in the possession of any other party to such suit ; and
 (c) for all or any of the purposes aforesaid authorize any samples to be taken, or any observation to be made or experiment to be tried, which may seem necessary or expedient for the purpose of obtaining full information or evidence.
 (2) The provisions as to execution of process shall apply, mutatis mutandis, to persons authorized to enter under this rule.

"Application."—The application can only be made after summons has been served, and after reasonable notice of the intention to apply for the order has been given in writing to the defendant (1) See next rule

Inspection.—The principle upon which the right of inspection is justified is that wherever in respect of the property of an individual a right accrues to another which cannot be measured without inspection of the subject or property, the Court is competent to compel the proprietor to permit such inspection as indispensable for administering justice (2) Under this rule the Court has jurisdiction to make an order for preparation of an inventory (3)

Detention, etc.—An order for investment is not an order for detention, custody or preservation under this rule (4)

"Subject matter of such suit"—the words of the English rule or as to which any question may arise therein were originally omitted because it was thought that the words marginally noted were sufficiently comprehensive to cover all matters in issue in the suit, (5) but they have now been inserted

8. (1) An application by the plaintiff for an order under rule 6 or rule 7 may be made after notice to the defendant at any time after institution of the suit.

and the Court in its decree may award against the defaulter the amount so paid, with interest thereon at such rate as the Court thinks fit, or may charge the amount so paid, with interest thereon at such rate as the Court orders, in any adjustment of accounts which may be directed in the decree passed in the suit

Decree not containing order for adjustment.—It was held in the under mentioned case (1) that a separate suit was not necessary, and that where a decree does not expressly direct an adjustment of accounts, such adjustment can be ordered in execution if it be shown from the nature of the decree that it could and should have contained such an order and is imperfect without it.

10. Where the subject-matter of a suit is money or some other thing capable of delivery and any party thereto admits that he holds such money or other thing as a trustee for another party, or that it belongs or is due to another party, the Court may order the same to be deposited in Court or delivered to such last-named party, with or without security, subject to the further direction of the Court

Deposit.—The rule applies only when the party making the admission holds the property or other thing which the party in whose favour the order is made seeks to have delivered to him. But even if this rule is intended to apply to a case where the property is not so held by the party making the admissions, it would not cover the case where the money was held by another Court to the credit of another suit (2)

ORDER XL.

Appointment of Receivers.

1. (1) Where it appears to the Court to be just and convenient, the Court may by order—

Appointment of receivers.

(a) appoint a receiver of any property, whether before or after decree ;

(b) remove any person from the possession or custody of the property ,

(c) commit the same to the possession, custody or management of the receiver , and

(d) confer upon the receiver all such powers as to bringing and defending suits and for the realization, management, protection, preservation and improvement of the property, the collection of the rents and profits thereof, the application and disposal of such rents and profits, and the execution of documents as the owner himself has, or such of those powers as the Court thinks fit

is

(2) Nothing in this rule shall authorize the Court to remove from the possession or custody of property any person whom any party to the suit has not a present right so to remove
2. The Court may by general or special order fix the amount to be paid as remuneration for the services of the receiver.

Amendments—The former Chapter XXXVI, dealing with Receivers contained three sections 503 504 and 505. Sect 503 has (subject to the amendments italicized) been incorporated in rr 1-3. R 1 corresponds with the first half and the last paragraph of sect 503. R 2 corresponds with the first portion of clause (d) the rest of that clause being retained in r 1. R 3 is the second half of sect 503 less the last paragraph, which has been put in r 1. R 4 is new. R 5 is sect 504. Sect 505 has been omitted. This is the most important change effected as the former restriction of power to High Courts and District Courts has been removed. Other amendments of former provisions appear to be of a verbal character.

Just and convenient—These words are derived from the English Judicature Act which greatly enlarged the powers which the Court of Chancery formerly exercised and the Courts in India have the fullest jurisdiction to appoint, as well as to remove a receiver in the exercise of judicial discretion (1)

Definition and nature of the Office of Receiver—A receiver is an independent person between the parties to a cause appointed by the Court to receive and preserve the property or fund in litigation pendente lite when it does not seem reasonable to the Court that either party should hold it, (2) or where a party is incompetent to do so as in the case of an infant (3). A receiver is a ministerial officer, originally of the Court of Chancery and as a general rule

(2) High on Receiver, sect. 1, Kerr on Receiver, 3, with regard to this definition it must be noted that the Court sometimes a mere custodian having no powers except those conferred by the order of his appointment, though with the growth of Equity jurisdiction it has become usual to clothe them with much larger powers than were formerly conferred (1) A receiver is an officer of the Court through whom Equity takes possession of the property which is the subject of a litigation, preserves it from waste and destruction, secures and collects the proceeds, and ultimately disposes of them according to the rights and priorities of those entitled thereto, whether regular parties in the cause, or only coming before the Court in a reasonable time and in the due course of procedure to assert and establish their claims. As the representative of the Court he is subject to its orders, accountable in such manner and to such persons as the Court may direct, and has in his character as receiver no personal interest save that arising out of his fiduciary capacity and responsibility for the correct and faithful discharge of his duties. He is not the representative of a party or parties, but the representative of the Court (2) A receiver can only be properly granted for the purpose of getting in and securing funds which the Court at the hearing, or in the course of the cause, will have the means of distributing among the persons entitled to those funds (3) The receiver appointed in a particular suit is nothing more than the hand of the Court so to speak, for the purpose of holding the property of the litigants whenever it is necessary that it should be kept in the grasp of the Court in order to preserve the subject-matter of the suit pendente lite, and the possession of the receiver is simply the possession of the Court. To such an extent is this the case that any attempt to disturb that possession, without the leave of the Court, is a contempt of Court. The receiver has no personal rights in the property and he cannot take any steps even for the purpose of defending his possession without the sanction of the Court. Also as a rule so little personal interest of any kind has he in the matter that he is not justified himself in making any application whatever to the Court. If it is necessary that he should take action of any sort it is for the parties to the suit, or one of them, to come to the Court to put him in motion, and whatever the receiver rightly does with regard to the property, he does it simply in the character of agent for the owners of the property or the persons interested in it, and with certain exceptions in no sense as principal (4) Although ordinarily a receiver does not himself apply for commencing proceedings for contempt, and although, generally speaking, the action is taken by the parties beneficially interested in the property, there is nothing to prohibit his doing so. Receivers have on occasions taken action themselves without the parties coming forward in the matter (5) A receiver has no proprietary rights or interest whatever. Notwithstanding his appointment the proprietary right in the estate remains in the persons who are by law entitled to the estate (6) The receiver's possession is not a possession by any personal right. It is the possession of the Court, and he is totally devoid of any interest in the property (1) A receiver should not be appointed in supersession of a bona fide possessor of the property in dispute unless there is some substantial ground for interference (2)

The general objects sought by the appointment of a receiver may be described to be to provide for the safety of property pending a litigation, and until the hearing of the cause, (3) or during the minority of infants to preserve property in danger of being dissipated or destroyed by those to whom care it is by law entrusted or by persons having immediate but partial interest therein (4) A receiver duly appointed is from the moment of his appointment to be considered as an officer of the Court itself He will be protected by it in the proper discharge of the necessary duties of his office, the possession of the receiver not being permitted to be disturbed without the special leave of the Court (5) and it will be treated as a contempt of the Court if any such interference takes place (6) the reason being as explained by Lord Eldon (7) that their possession is the possession of the Court (8) and the Court being competent to examine the title will not permit itself to be made a suitor in a Court of law, but will itself examine the title, the mode being by permitting the party to come in to be examined pro interesse suo (9)

MANAGER He is bound to carry on in accordance with the general course of business adopted by the particular trade, and is the servant and officer of the Court, and must, upon any question arising as to the character or details of the management, be directed by the Court, which on appointing a manager of a business or undertaking in effect, assumes the management into its own hands. Managers are responsible to the Court which appoints them, and no order of any of the parties interested in the business over which they are appointed managers can interfere with this responsibility. The Court will in no case assume the management of a business or undertaking, except with a view to the winding up and sale of the business or undertaking. The management is an interim management, its necessity and its jurisdiction spring out of the jurisdiction to liquidate and sell, the business or undertaking is managed and continued in order that it may be sold as a going concern and with the sale the management ends. A manager may be appointed to carry on a private trade or business so as to wind it up for the benefit of the parties interested (1) The Court, if it can appoint a receiver, has ample power to provide for the management of the property, and can deal with property which is under its control just as completely as the owner of the property can deal with it (2) In cases where the manager of the estate must necessarily reside in the country where the estate is situated, it is usual in English practice to add to the order directing the appointment of a manager, an order for the appointment of one or more consignees (who are the paid agents of the Court to manage the estate which is in the hands of the Court) resident in England to whom the produce of the property in question may be remitted and by whom it may be disposed of (3)

The possession of the receiver is on behalf and for the benefit of all the parties to the suit in which he is appointed (4) His possession is the possession of all the parties to the proceeding according to their titles. The property in his hands is in custodia legis for the person who can make a title to it. It does not follow that because wide powers are conferred upon receivers including a power to remove the property in possession his relation either to the Court or to the parties interested in the proceeding undergoes any change in proportion to the extent of his powers (5) The appointment though it may operate to change possession has no effect itself upon the title to the property in any way and determines no right as between the parties (6) Although a receiver is an officer to hold property for the benefit of the party ultimately entitled to it

though the ordinary law of principal and agent applies to this extent, that what the receiver rightly does he does in the character of agent for the owner (whoever he be) of the property, and this is so even in the case of parties who opposed his appointment or objected to his receiving particular powers (3). It was held under the Code of 1859, which contained less extensive provisions than those of the last and present Code, that his duties as officer of the Court were confined in the case of property the subject of attachment to realizing, preserving, or managing the property for the collection of the moneys and money profits due to the debtors (4). Where, however, the receiver of attached property acts in the exercise of powers conferred upon him by the Court, it is erroneous to regard him as the judgment creditor's agent because on his application the appointment is made. The appointment is the act of the Court, and once made he is an officer of the Court and subject to its orders (5). A receiver is frequently spoken of as the "hand of the Court," and the expression very aptly designates his functions as well as the relation which he sustains to the Court. The assets and property in his hands are as much in the custody of the law as if levied upon under an execution or attachment, it being held that the appointment of a receiver is in effect an equitable execution by means of which the Court makes a general appropriation thereof, leaving the question of who may finally be entitled to be determined thereafter (6). When a party is declared entitled to the property by the final decree in a suit the Court has no option but to give that party possession of it. The Court having been in possession of the property on behalf of the parties to the suit is bound to give possession to the successful party in that suit. Any one else entering into possession would be a trespasser (7). He has no estate or interest himself, and his power to manage is created simply by the order of the Court appointing him, and is binding only upon the persons

(1) Orr v Muthia Chetti, 503. This principle is applicable in the case of a suit in which title to property is decreed, and not to attached property the title to which continues to vest in the judgment debtor. before the Court (1) His powers at best are no more than those which the parties to the suit turn out to be possessed of when the case is finally decided but if he takes possession of property under colour of his appointment his conduct cannot be disputed by a motion to discharge or get rid of the attachment (2) As the servant of the Court and not of the parties he has only such power as the Court may choose to give him and it is a contempt for any of the parties to enter into an agreement with him restricting and controlling his powers (3)

Appointment of receiver is a form of specific relief—The appointment of a receiver pending a suit is a form of specific relief (4) The last Code (5) further provided for the appointment of a receiver of property under attachment (6) This can still be done by virtue of the words any property and before or after decree Relief by specific performance injunction and receiver belong to the same branch of the law Moreover the appointment of a receiver operates as an injunction against the parties their agents and persons claiming under them restraining them from interfering with the possession of the receiver except by permission of the Court (7) and an order for an injunction is always more or less included in an order for a receiver It is not necessary if a receiver be appointed to go on and grant an injunction in terms (8) All three forms of relief are dealt with by the Specific Relief Act The issue of temporary injunctions and the appointment of receivers together with the orders in many respects a close analogy to that by temporary injunction Both are extraordinary equitable remedies as distinguished from the ordinary modes of administering relief Both are essentially preventive in their nature being properly used only for the prevention of future injury rather than for the redress of past grievances Both have one common object in so far as they seek to preserve the res or subject matter of the litigation unimpaired to be disposed of in accordance with the future decree or order of the Court (10)

Whether however the negative duty or duty to abstain be contractual or general the injunction which enforces it is the same in nature and form The general grounds of similarity between relief by receiver and by injunction have been adverted to Perhaps the principal element of difference between these two important remedies lies in this that an injunction is strictly a conservative remedy merely restraining action and preserving matter in statu quo without affecting the possession of the property or fund in controversy while the appointment of a receiver is usually a more active remedy since it changes the possession as well as the subsequent control and management of the property. The Court by an injunction ties up the hands of the defendants, and preserves unchanged not only the property itself but the relations of all parties thereto. But in appointing a receiver the Court goes still further, since it wrests the possession from the defendant, and assumes and maintains the entire management of the property or fund, frequently changing its form, and retaining possession through its officer, the receiver, until the rights of all parties in interest are satisfactorily determined.

From the point of resemblance already indicated, it is not to be inferred that the appointment of a receiver necessarily follows from the granting of an injunction, or that the two remedies are necessarily inseparable. And while it frequently happens that the Courts are called upon to administer both species of relief in the same action, and at one and the same time, yet it by no means follows that because an injunction is granted a receiver must be appointed, and the two are to be treated as distinct and independent matters. The Court, therefore, may refuse a receiver although the case presented is a fitting one for an injunction, and although an injunction has already been granted (1). A distinction exists between the case in which an injunction and that in which a receiver will be issued and appointed respectively. "That distinction seems to be that, while in either case it must be shown that the property should be preserved from waste or alienation, in the former case it would be sufficient, if it be shown that the plaintiff in the suit has a fair question to raise as to the existence of the right alleged, while in the latter case, a good prima facie title has to be made out" (2).

Relief, whether it be given by the issue of an injunction or the appointment of a receiver, is granted generally upon the principle quia timet, that is, the Court assists the party who seeks its aid, because he fears (quia timet) some future probable injury to his rights or interests, and not because an injury has already occurred which requires any compensation or other relief.

Both the earlier Codes (Act VIII of 1859, and X of 1877) dealt with the subject (7). Act X of 1877, however, contained provisions of a more complete character, and which were in fact, with some minor alterations in the sections relating to receivers, the same as those of the present Code. Sect. 92 of Act VIII of 1859 enabled the Court to appoint a receiver or manager in all cases in which it might appear to the Court to be necessary for the preservation or the better management or the custody of any property "which is in dispute in a suit," and sect. 243 enabled the Court to appoint a manager to realize debts or rents and receipts of landed property where the debts or land were attached in execution of decree. Chapter XXXVI. of the Code of 1877, which, with some minor alterations, (1) was identical with the same Chapter of the last Code, supplied the place of both of these provisions, and going further, gave the Court very general powers as to the appointment of receiver (2). Further, orders made under sect. 92 of Act VIII. of 1859, were appealable only at the instance of the defendant, (3) but orders made under sect. 503 of the Codes of 1877 (4) or 1882 (5) were appealable at the instance of either party. Prior to the establishment of the High Courts, the Supreme Courts of the Presidencies appointed receivers following the principles and practice of the Court of Chancery in England (6). The provisions of the present Code are (with one important exception) the same as those of the last, with certain omissions which have been noted and additions which have been italicized, and the principal of which will be found in rr. 1, 2, and 4. The exception is the omission of sect. 503 of the last Code, as to which, see post.

injunction or the appointment of a receiver, cannot be granted for the mere purpose of enforcing a penal law, (1) that is, such enforcement must not be the sole object of requiring specific relief, but the real object must be the protection of some civil rights or the prevention of a tort or civil wrong. Though, however, the Court cannot interfere for the purpose of giving a better remedy in the case of a criminal offence, yet if an act which is criminal touches also the enjoyment of the property the Court has jurisdiction. (2) So the fact that an act complained of amounts to the criminal offence of misappropriation rather than to simple waste, is no ground for refusing relief by way of appointment of a receiver. (3)

(B) Secondly, assuming the matter to be of a civil nature, it is ordinarily a necessary condition to the grant of either form of relief that there should be a suit pending in which either of these reliefs may be granted. (4) Under the last Code, however, a receiver might have been appointed not merely of property the "subject of a suit," but also of property "under attachment." And though these words are omitted this is doubtless so now. (5) The suit must be pending in the Court from which either of these reliefs is sought. Thus, a District Court has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver or manager in respect of property in dispute in a suit pending in a Subordinate Court, (6) and where a Court has thus no jurisdiction to make an order it can have no jurisdiction to modify such order. (7) R 1 gives power only to the Court in which the suit is brought or by which the property has been attached. A Court cannot appoint a receiver except it has seisin of the property either by a suit being pending or by proceedings in execution of decree made in a suit being pending, and attachment having been made. It is only the Court in which a proceeding is pending, and which has thereby the property under its control, that can appoint a receiver. It was formerly only where the procedure contained in sect 505 of the last Code had been adopted that a District Court could appoint a receiver in suits pending before or attachments made by subordinate Courts. (8) As to this now, vide post.

(C) Thirdly, not only must the matter be of a civil, as opposed to a criminal, nature and subject to what is above stated a suit be pending but such suit must disclose a cause of action, and to entertain it. If it has not such grant relief. The Court must not be from taking cognizance of the suit, which must further be not only of a civil nature generally, but within the meaning of that Code. (9)

(D) Lastly, the Court to which application for the relief prayed for is made, must be one which, assuming all the preceding conditions to have been fulfilled, has otherwise jurisdiction to try the suit in which that relief is sought. With regard to this, the extensive power of the Court of Chancery to act in personam must be considered with reference to the limitation on jurisdiction imposed by the Charter and by the Code. The Courts of this country have ordinarily no jurisdiction to try suits for immovable property where such property is situate without the local limits of their jurisdiction and it would appear to be doubtful whether the equitable jurisdiction of the High Courts in India is of the same extent as that which has been claimed by the Court of Chancery, namely, to take cognizance of any equity between persons residing within the jurisdiction respecting lands outside it. But whatever may be the precise extent of the jurisdiction the Civil Procedure Code has given to the Mofussil Courts the power to act in personam when the person against whom relief is sought resides within the jurisdiction. The Presidency High Courts under their Charter have a similar but in terms less restrictive jurisdiction (1). In the case of receivers it is not necessary in all cases to authorize the Court to make an appointment that the property in respect of which the receiver is to be appointed should be within the local limits of its jurisdiction (2).

The Presidency High Courts possess the same powers with regard to the appointment of a receiver as are possessed and exercised by the Courts in England under the Judicature Act of 1873 and the practice in respect of these matters should be the same (3). Formerly while all Civil Courts, with certain exceptions had jurisdiction to issue injunctions on the other hand the powers conferred by the Code in respect of the appointment of receiver could be exercised by the High Courts and District Courts only provided that whenever the Judge of a Court subordinate to a District Court (1) considered it expedient that a receiver should be appointed in any suit before him he nominated such person as he considered fit for such appointment and submitted such person's name with the grounds for the nomination to the District Court and the District Court authorized such Judge to appoint the person so nominated or passed such orders as it thought fit (5). The first step taken by the Subordinate Judge was to nominate and from this proceeding there was no appeal the Judge then approved and authorized the appointment and from this also there was no appeal then the Subordinate Judge appointed the receiver previously nominated and from his order there was an appeal (6). The Judge of the Lower Subordinate Court had first to satisfy himself that it was expedient that a receiver should be appointed in a suit before him, for this purpose he had to inquire judicially, and satisfy himself upon evidence that the appointment of a receiver was necessary and recommend a proper person. He did this under sect 503 of the last Code. If he refused to do it his order refusing the application was an order under the same section, and as such was appealable (1). In the first of the last mentioned cases, it was held that an order by a Subordinate Judge dismissing an application for the appointment of a receiver after obtaining sanction from the District Judge was appealable. But it was recently held that a Subordinate Judge when considering the expediency of the appointment of a receiver, was also acting under sect 503, and whether he appointed or whether he refused to take the necessary steps preliminary to the appointment, he was equally acting under sect 503 and an appeal lay (2). After such inquiry he was to nominate such person as he considered fit to be nominated, and submit such person's name with the grounds for the nomination to the District Court, then, if the District Court authorized such Judge to appoint the person so nominated, but not otherwise, he was to appoint him. But the Judge of the District Court might decline to authorize the Judge of the Lower Court to make the appointment of the person so nominated, and might himself pass "such other order as he thinks fit" (3). These words in the last Code gave the Judge of the District Court full control over the matter of the appointment of a receiver. His duty was not only to approve or disapprove of the particular person nominated, but also to take into consideration the necessity for the appointment of a receiver at all (4). These words gave full discretion to the District Judge to pass such order as the circumstances of the case, considered in all their bearings, required. He might give the proper directions to the Subordinate Court. Nomination in sect 503 seemed to be equivalent to the conditional appointment of a receiver which the District Court could accept or reject or modify (5). In the latter case the District Judge made an ex parte order for the appointment of a receiver under sect 503. Subsequently, the District Court made an order admitting a review. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court. Without deciding whether an appeal would lie against the order of the District Judge, the High Court dismissed the appeal, holding that the order of the District Judge having been in the first instance ex parte, he had clearly the power to review it (6). But the words, it was held, must be read as controlled by the words preceding them and did not confer upon the District Court the power itself to appoint a receiver not nominated by the Subordinate Court (7). The Judge of the Lower Court in making his inquiry, had all the power conferred upon him that might be necessary for such inquiry. He might adjourn the case from time to time, and he might hear fresh evidence at any time before he made the appointment. He might even abstain from appointing when he had received the necessary authority if he had good grounds for so doing; otherwise he might be appointing an unfit person when he had facts before him to show that the appointment would be most improper. Sect. 505 of the former Code was not imperative. It merely enabled the Judge of the Lower Court to appoint when authorized by the District Court to do so (1). As already stated, sect. 505 of the former Code has now been omitted. It was considered that its effect in practice was often to defeat the purpose for which an application was made, and that having regard to their standard of efficiency there was no longer any reason to withhold from Subordinate Judges the power to appoint receivers.

The jurisdiction to appoint a receiver may be exercised either by a Court of first instance or by a Court of Appeal (2). In order to give the Court jurisdiction there must be a pending suit, (3) and the Court cannot in so far as its power to appoint a receiver extends only to the better management or custody of any property which is the subject of a suit appoint or continue the previous appointment of a receiver when the suit comes to an end by its dismissal (4) but when a suit is decreed there is nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure which limits the power of the Court to appoint a receiver after the decree when this course is necessary or proper. This is now expressly stated. As long as the order appointing a receiver remains unrevoked and as long as the suit remains a lis pendens, the functions of the receiver continue until he is discharged by order of the Court (5). Although the dismissal of a suit may operate as a discharge of the receiver appointed in it (6) yet the Court has ample jurisdiction without the aid of a pending process to require accounts from its own officer to permit parties interested to intervene in the examination of these accounts to make just allowances to its officers for his administration and to deal with all questions of costs connected with the investigation of his accounts as between him and any parties interested who may be allowed to appear and take part in it (7).

The Court if it can appoint a receiver has ample powers to provide for the management of the property and can deal with property which is under its control just as completely as the owner of the property can deal with it (8). The subject matter of the appointment was in terms of the last Code (vide now ante) property moveable or immovable which was the subject of the suit (9).

or under attachment which latter words applied to property taken for the first time in execution of any decree (1) Where the property to be managed is not the subject of the suit no manager can be appointed before attachment (2) Where owing to the value of the subject matter of a suit the Court has no power to try the same, any order made therein by way of appointment of a receiver is passed without jurisdiction (3) The fact that the acts complained of and which form the ground of an application for a receiver amount to a criminal offence rather than to a civil wrong will not deprive the Court of jurisdiction if such acts affect a right to property (4) It was held by the Allahabad High Court that the fact that there exists, in respect of any immovable property an order of a Magistrate passed under sect 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is no bar to the exercise by a civil Court of the power conferred on it by r 1 of appointing a receiver in respect of the same property, for the Magistrate's order under sect 145 is only intended to control any period up to the time when the Civil Court takes seisin of the matter, and passes such order as may be necessary for the protection of the property (5) But it has been recently held by the Calcutta High Court that the appointment of a receiver by a Civil Court under r 1 of this order cannot supersede an appointment by a Magistrate and that the Court should either appoint as its receiver the person appointed by the Magistrate or should make a conditional appointment and inform the Magistrate of it so that he may have an opportunity to withdraw his attachment (6)

The appointment may be made either by a Court of first instance or by a Court of Appeal

first instance after dismissal of the suit but before appeal filed asking that a receiver might be restrained from parting with funds in his hands pending an appeal was held to be one which the Court had no jurisdiction to grant The Court's jurisdiction extends no further in regard to a suit which has ceased to be a pending suit (7)

An Appellate Court may also appoint a receiver If therefore a party whose suit has been dismissed desires to have any measure taken for the realization preservation better custody or management of property claimed by him he is at liberty after filing his appeal to apply to the Appellate Court which has authority to make or continue the appointment pending the determination of the appeal If a receiver has been appointed but the facts proved only warrant the issue of an injunction the Appellate Court will set aside the order appointing a receiver and in lieu thereof will issue an injunction (8) When a receiver of a property has been appointed by an Appellate Court pending an appeal to the Court, he must even when the appeal is no longer pending, be regarded as the receiver of the property of which he has been put in possession until he is finally discharged, and the Appellate Court has jurisdiction to deal with matters relating to the receiver including proceedings for contempt, until he has had his accounts passed by it (1)

The grant of preventive or protective relief is purely discretionary—The exercise of the jurisdiction to appoint a receiver or issue an injunction (2) is not a matter ex debito justitiæ, but one which is purely within the discretion of the Court. The latter is not bound to grant such relief merely because it is lawful to do so. But the discretion of the Court is not arbitrary but sound and reasonable, guided by judicial principles and capable of correction by a Court of Appeal (3). All questions of discretion are usually questions of degree (4). Where there is a discretion exercisable the Court is bound to look at all the circumstances of the case (5). The jurisdiction of the Court to interfere being equitable is governed on equitable principles. And, therefore, the Court will, amongst other things, look to the conduct of the person who makes the application (6). Where an appeal attacks the exercise of discretion, before the Appellate Court will interfere on this ground in favour of the appellant, the latter must satisfy such Court that the discretion has been improperly exercised (7).

The appointment as well as the removal of a receiver is also a matter which rests in the sound discretion of the Court (8). In exercising its discretion the Court should proceed with caution (9) and be governed by a view of the whole circumstances of the case (10). The power conferred by the Code to appoint a receiver is not to be exercised as a matter of course and it is not a reason for case of a bona fide possessor with legal title (1) The main principles upon which such discretion should be exercised have been laid down in the case of Owen v Homan, (2) and those principles have been held to be as equally applicable in this country as in England (3) In that case Lord Cranworth said — "The receiver, if appointed in this case, must be appointed on the principle on which the Court of Chancery acts of preserving property pending the litigation which is to decide the right of the litigant parties In such cases the Court must of necessity exercise a discretion as to whether it will or will not interfere by this kind of interim protection of the property Where, indeed, the property is as it were in medio, in the enjoyment of no one, the Court can hardly do wrong in taking possession It is the common interest of all parties that the Court should prevent a scramble Such is the case when a receiver of a property of a deceased person is appointed pending a litigation in the Ecclesiastical Court as to the right of probate or administration (4) No one is in the actual lawful enjoyment of property so circumstanced, and no wrong can be done to any one by taking it and preserving it for the benefit of the successful litigant But where the object of the plaintiff is to assert a right to property of which the defendant is in the ally fail in establishing his right against the defendant, the Court may by its interim interference have caused mischief to the defendant for which the subsequent restoration of the property may afford no adequate compensation In all cases, therefore, where the Court interferes by appointing a receiver of property in the possession of the defendant before the title of the defendant is established by decree, it exercises a discretion to be governed by all the circumstances of the case" (5)

As in the case of injunctions the Court will always look to the conduct of the party who makes the application for a receiver and will not interfere unless his conduct has been free from blame, (6) and parties who have acquiesced in property being enjoyed against their own alleged rights cannot come to the Court for this form of relief (7) A stronger case is generally required for the appointment of a receiver than for the issue of an injunction It may well be that circumstances which will warrant the issue of an injunction will not warrant the appointment of a receiver Accordingly, while the Court may in its discretion refuse to appoint a receiver, it may yet consider the case to be one which calls for an injunction The opinion of the Court of first instance is, in these matters of great weight It has all the facts and the parties before it and is probably the best tribunal to decide whether it is necessary or expedient, having regard to the circumstances of the case, that a receiver should be appointed (1) And a party who in appeal attacks the exercise of this discretion should show that the discretion has been improperly so exercised (2) The exercise of the power being thus discretionary it would be difficult, even if it were possible, with any precision to make out the limits within which it is ordinarily circumscribed, but some of the principles which govern the discretion of the Court in such appointment will be found considered more fully and in detail in the work cited (3) in those Chapters which specially treat of the cases in which a receiver may be appointed

The best guides in the matter of interference by way of injunction and receiver have been judicially stated to be the principles which determine the action of Courts of Equity in England (4) It is, in fact, on these principles that the relief given in Indian Courts by injunction and receiver is in the main founded

A judgment of the Court which is in personam may be enforced by process in personam, that is, by attachment of the person when the person is within the jurisdiction or by sequestration of the goods or lands of the defendant when these are within the jurisdiction of the Court until the defendant do comply with the judgment or order of the Court (5) Under the authority conferred by the Charters of the Supreme Courts and continued by their own Letters Patent the High Courts in India possess the power of enforcing obedience to their orders by attachment for contempt (6) and they have all the powers of a Court of Equity in England for enforcing their decrees in personam (7) The jurisdiction of the High Court to imprison for contempt is a jurisdiction that it has inherited from the old Supreme Court and was conferred upon that Court by the Charters of the Crown, which invested it with all the powers and authority of the then Court of Chancery in Great Britain and this jurisdiction has not been removed or affected by the Code (8) The power of the Mofussil Courts to commit for contempt otherwise than under the authority of special statutory enactments conferring or of case law recognizing that power is a matter of doubt (9)

A receiver is an officer of the Court and the Court will therefore see that he performs his function and will protect the agent appointed under its orders (1) Being such officer, his possession is simply the possession of the Court and to such an extent is this the case that any attempt to disturb that possession without leave of the Court is a contempt of Court (2) Thus an attachment of money in the hands of the receiver is an interference with the Court's possession through its officer the receiver and may not therefore be made without the Court's leave first obtained (3) The mere appointment of a receiver operates as an injunction against the parties their agents and persons claiming under them restraining them from interfering with the possession of the receiver except by permission of the Court (4) The Court requires and insists that application should be made to it for permission to take possession of any property of which the receiver has taken or is directed to take possession The rule is not confined to property actually in the hands of a receiver The Court will not permit any one without its sanction and authority to intercept or prevent payment to the receiver of any property which he has been appointed to receive though it may not be actually in his hands (5) The form in which the Court usually enforces its order in the matter of receivers is in extreme or aggravated cases by commitment to prison or ordinarily by ordering the party in contempt to pay the costs and expenses occasioned by his improper conduct and the costs of the application In cases where the contempt consists in entering upon land in the possession of a receiver or in bringing an action against the receiver or against a party over whose property a receiver has been appointed the Court restrains by injunction the trespass or prosecution of the action and orders the party in contempt to pay the costs of the application (6) The High Courts in India being Superior Courts of Record have full powers to punish for contempt of their orders committed either directly or through interference with the action of officers appointed by them (7) It has already been observed that the nature and extent of the powers of Mofussil Courts in the matter of contempt is doubtful in the absence of express statutory provisions on the subject The Code does not directly provide for the case of the breach of or the enforcement of orders under r 1 (otherwise than in execution of a decree) as it does in the case of interlocutory orders under O XXXI rr 1 2 But the order appointing a receiver operates per se as an injunction and if necessary for the purpose of giving express effect to the order an injunction may be granted in terms Although ordinarily the receiver does not himself apply for commencing proceedings by way of contempt and generally speaking action is taken by the parties beneficially interested there is nothing to prohibit his doing so (8)

although the appeal be no longer pending jurisdiction to deal with matters relating to the receiver, including proceedings for contempt, until he has had his accounts passed by it (1) A receiver, being a mere officer of the Court, is bound to obey every order of the Court, and if he neglects or refuses to comply therewith, he stands in no better position than any other person, and may be punished in the same way (2)

the functions to be discharged by him Inasmuch as a receiver is required to be an impartial person, the person chosen should as a general rule be wholly disinterested in the subject matter of the suit The Court may however, with the consent of all the parties, or in very special cases without such consent, appoint as receiver a person who is mixed up in the subject matter of the suit, if it is satisfied that the appointment would be attended with benefit to the estate Where the defendant in a suit for partition made an application regarding the custody of the property, and the Court directed suo motu that pending the suit the plaintiff should have the control and management of one part of the property and the defendant should have the same power over the rest, it was held that this order was legal and proper and practically amounted to an order under r. 1 (3) Apart from the question of interest, the Court will consider the character and qualifications of the person proposed, his familiarity with the kind of property to be managed his place of residence with reference to the estate to be managed his ability to spare sufficient time for the duties of his office, and other similar facts bearing upon the appointment (4) The second general rule is that the Court is averse to appointing as receivers persons occupying relations of trust as trustees executors or otherwise towards the property or estate which is the subject of the receivership The reason of this rule is that the Court is exceedingly jealous of appointing any person to a receivership whose duty it would otherwise be to watch the proceedings of the receiver or to call him to an account for his management (5)

In all cases the selection of a particular person for the receivership is regarded as a matter of judicial discretion to be determined by the Court according to the circumstances of the case The exercise of this like all other matters of judicial discretion will rarely be interfered with by an appellate tribunal and it may be stated, as a general rule that to induce an Appellate Court to interfere with the decision of an inferior tribunal in the selection of a receiver it is necessary to show some "overwhelming objection in point of propriety of choice or some objection fatal in principle," to the person named (6)

A receiver may be appointed of any property, whether moveable or immoveable, provided it is the subject matter of a suit or under attachment, and probably, though the italicized words have now been omitted the appointment will be limited to such cases. In, however, suits for partition of joint estates the Court has jurisdiction to place the whole of the estate out of which the plaintiff seeks to have his share partitioned, in the hands of a receiver, and to order that the latter shall be at liberty to raise money on the security of the whole of such joint estate (1). Receivers have been appointed of undivided shares, though Equity is generally averse to extending the aid of a receiver as between joint owners or tenants in common (2).

Time when receiver may be appointed — A receiver may be appointed during the pendency of the litigation at any time before decree. The application for a receiver may be made at any stage of the action according as the urgency of the case requires it. Where proceedings are already pending an order for a receiver may be made in these proceedings without any fresh suit being instituted. If the appointment of a receiver is a substantial object of the action the plaint should contain such a prayer, and if it does not, upon amendment a receiver may be obtained (3). A receiver may also be appointed or continued (4) by the decree, or the appointment may be made after the decree, (5) even though it had been previously refused, if a state of facts entitling the party to a receiver were made to appear in the proceedings in

Act (8). A receiver will be appointed at the instance of a mortgagee when the interest payable under the security is in arrear (9).

Time from which appointment takes place — Where an order is made that a certain person upon his giving security, be appointed receiver, the order appoints the receiver conditionally upon his giving security only, a receiver becomes such on giving security. When he has done that he can take possession. He is not legally clothed with the character of receiver, nor able to perform its duties, until he has given security and his recognizances are perfected. It has been held that the appointment of a receiver as far as it affects the rights of creditors or third parties dates not from the order appointing him, but from the completion of the security required to be given by the order and, accordingly, until the appointment has been completed a judgment creditor is not debarred from proceeding to execution (1) But in a later case it has been held that the appointment of a receiver is complete on the entry of an order of appointment although he may not be able to take actual possession of the property until the security is approved (2) If no security is required (which should appear upon the face of the order) the appointment is complete upon possession being taken under the order (3) When as will be done in urgent cases an interim receiver is appointed for a limited time without security he becomes an officer of the Court and is legally clothed with that character from the date of his appointment (4) The receiver's liability however to account in respect of moneys received and expended by him as receiver at once arises whether the security has been completed or not (5) As far as respects parties to the action the rents and profits of the estate over which a receiver has been appointed are bound from the date of the order for the appointment (6) but the latter does not date back to the date of the application (7) Though outsiders may not be affected until the completion of the security the parties to the suit may, before such time be restrained from touching the property (8)

Duration of receivership—Except (according to English practice) in the case of managers there is often no limit of time fixed (9) When this is the case, and the suit is dismissed the dismissal of the suit will in general operate as a discharge of the receiver But if the suit is decreed and no limit is fixed in the appointment of a receiver it is not necessary for the judgment to direct that he be continued (10) Sometimes the receiver is only appointed until judgment, that is during the pendency of the suit or until further orders When this is the case if he is to continue receiver the judgment must so direct and as this is practically a new appointment further security must be given unless as is usually the case the security originally given is made applicable to any continuation of the appointment (11) It is within the discretion of a Court appointing a receiver in a suit to order that the office should continue permanently after the decree when such continuance is necessary or for so long as it may be so (12)

Mode of appointment—A receiver will not be appointed under the Code unless an action is pending or the property be the subject of attachment (vide ante). A plaint should be filed claiming a receiver, where the obtaining of it is a substantial object of the action. Application should be made upon or after, the filing of the plaint and before or after, service of the writ. An application for a receiver may be made on motion or on petition. The party applying may either move to obtain a rule nisi or serve notice of motion. If the matter be urgent he may apply for an ad interim receiver until the hearing of the application or he may apply for leave to serve short notice of motion. It is submitted that under the Code the Court possesses the power of appointing a receiver at the instance of the defendant but that the exercise of such jurisdiction will be limited to cases where the defendant's claim to relief arises out of the plaintiff's cause of action or is incidental to it but that if the relief sought by a defendant is not connected with the subject matter of the plaint the defendant must if he desires a receiver, institute an action of his own for such purpose (1). Application for a receiver may be made either ex parte or on notice but it is only in case of emergency that a receiver will be appointed upon an ex parte application as where there is any risk of making away with the property of a receiver. The Courts upon application ex parte (2). The motion should be properly founded on affidavits copies of which should be served with notice of the application although if the papers on which the moving party seeks relief are already on file on the cause it is sufficient to refer to them in the notice. It is not regarded as necessary or essential to the appointment of a receiver that the facts upon which the application is based should be set forth in the pleadings but it is sufficient if they are presented to the Court by affidavit upon the hearing of the motion. It is proper on denying a motion for a receiver to give leave to the moving party to renew his motion upon additional proof if it appears that he may by obtaining new proof present a strong case for the relief sought and it is competent for a plaintiff to ask for and for the Court to appoint a receiver after a hearing and even after a rehearing and refusal when an altered state of facts is presented showing an appropriate case for the relief. But when the application has once been before the Court and has been denied a receiver will not be appointed upon a subsequent application upon a simple motion for that purpose founded upon the same papers as before without affidavits or additional proof showing a necessity for the relief. The person whose property it is sought to place in the receiver's hands must be made a party to the suit in order that he may have an opportunity of resisting the application the granting of which might result in irreparable injury to his interests (3).

Security—Every receiver appointed must give such security (if any) as the Court thinks fit duly to account for what he shall receive in respect of the property (4). As a general rule security is required but if as in ex parte and cases, no security is to be given, it should be so stated in the order. Where a person is appointed receiver subject to his giving security, the order is not effective until security is given (1). According to English practice, where there is evidence of immediate danger to the property and there is no time for the receiver to complete his security, an interim receiver may be appointed without security for a limited period or until a receiver should be appointed under a reference for that purpose upon the undertaking of the person so appointed interim receiver, if he be the plaintiff, not to deal with the property except under the direction of the Court, and to abide by any order which the Court may think fit to make as to damages or otherwise. In other cases where the case is urgent and there is no time for the receiver to complete his security, the party moving the Court must enter into an undertaking as to damages and for the receipts of the receiver, or must undertake that the person so appointed receiver shall give such security as the Court can enforce that he will preserve intact the property of which he is appointed receiver (2). There seems to be no reason why this course should not be followed in this country if necessary. In any case the Court might dispense with security or in the case of the High Court appoint the Court receiver. The Court has, moreover, where there was great danger to the property appointed a receiver without security and directed him to take possession before the order of appointment was formally drawn up (3).

Effect of appointment—A receiver duly appointed is from the moment of his appointment an officer of the Court and entitled to the possession of the property comprised in the order appointing him. The effect of the appointment is to remove the parties to the action from the possession of the property (4) subject to this that the Court cannot remove from the possession or custody of property under attachment any person whom the parties to the suit or some or one of them has or have not a present right so to remove (5). The appointment, however, though it may operate to change possession has no effect itself upon the title to the property in any way and determines no right as between the parties (6). Receivers and managers are only custodians of the property of which they take possession. The Court in an action for a receiver deals with the possession only until the right can be determined if the right be the subject matter in dispute between the parties or until the incumbrances have been cleared off, if the appointment has been made at the suit of an incumbrancer. The title is in no way prejudiced in theory or principle by the appointment (7) and remains in those in whom it was vested when the appointment was made (8). The possession of the Court by its receiver is the possession of all parties to the suit according to their titles. His appointment is not for the benefit of the plaintiff merely, but for all other persons who may establish right to the cause. He is not the particular agent of any party but an officer of the Court (1). With regard to the limitations on his title, it is to be observed that his possession is subject to all valid and existing liens upon the property, at the time of his appointment, and it does not divest a lien previously acquired in good faith (2). The rights of the parties to an action are not interfered with by the appointment (3). It is not averse to either party (4). If at the time a receiver is appointed a party claiming a right in the same subject matter under a title paramount to that under which the receiver is appointed is in possession of the right which he claims, the appointment of the receiver leaves him in possession (5). The appointment of a receiver is a matter which does not concern mortgagees or prior incumbrancers, for a receiver in the exercise of his authority will be obliged to respect former orders of the Court, and prior incumbrancers are at liberty to take such proceedings in behalf of their own interests as they may think fit (6). The appointment operates as an injunction against the parties, their agents and persons claiming under them, restraining them from interfering with the possession of the receiver except by permission of the Court (7). The order does not, however, create a charge, but it operates as an injunction to restrain the defendant from himself receiving the proceeds of sale (8). A receiver of land never takes actual possession, he only receives the rent, nor does he receive such rent and profits by virtue of an estate or title vested in him, but he collects the same merely as an officer of the Court upon the title of some persons parties to the action (9).

Possession and interference with possession of receiver—The receiver being the officer of the Court from which he derives his appointment, his possession is exclusively the possession of the Court, the property being regarded as in the custody of the law, in gremio legis for the benefit of whoever may be ultimately determined to be entitled thereto. The possession being therefore that of the Court may not be disturbed without the leave of the Court, and any person who disturbs such possession is guilty of a contempt and liable to punishment therefor. No one is entitled to interfere with the possession whether he claims under or paramount to the right which the receiver was appointed to protect (10). Thus an attachment of money in the hands of the receiver is an interference with the Court's possession and may not, therefore, be made without the Court's leave first obtained (11). When the Court appoints

a receiver it requires the parties to the action to give up the possession to the receiver of all property comprised in the order and treats them as guilty of contempt if they refuse to do so (1)

As a general rule appointment of more than one receiver whether by the same or a different Court, except in case of joint receivers, is not allowable (2) If at the time a receiver is appointed a party claiming a right in the same subject matter is in possession of the right which he claims, the appointment of the receiver leaves him in possession of the right, and does not interfere with the exercise of it (3) If, on the other hand, the claimant is out of possession he must apply to the Court before he institutes any legal proceedings affecting the possession which the receiver has acquired (4) even where the receiver has been appointed without prejudice to the rights of persons having prior charges (5) So, too, where a receiver has been appointed over the estate of a tenant in possession, though the appointment does not affect the rights of the landlord, the latter will not be permitted to exercise these rights, as for example the right of distrainment without first obtaining the leave of the Court (6)

Parties whose rights are interfered with by having a receiver put in their way may, on making a proper application to the Court, obtain all that they may justly require. The Court has the power, and will always take care to give a party who applies in a regular manner for the protection of his rights the means of obtaining justice and will even assist him in asserting that right and having the benefit of it (7) The course of a party who claims a right paramount to that of the receiver, or rather to that of the party obtaining the receiver, is either to apply on notice in the action in which the receiver was appointed and to come in and be examined pro interesse suo or to apply for leave to proceed by action notwithstanding the receiver's possession (8) The application in the suit is usually framed in the alternative that the receiver do accede to the plaintiff's demand or that the latter may be allowed to proceed (9) In most instances a party aggrieved may have ample relief by application on motion to the Court appointing the receiver. In most cases of claims against a receiver the remedy by motion is adequate, and any person having such a claim may resort to this summary remedy. The more common practice and that which has been generally commended by the Court, is to hear and determine all rights of action and demands against a receiver by petition in the cause in which he was appointed without remitting the parties to a new and independent suit. And it rests wholly within the discretion of the Court to grant leave to bring an independent action against its receiver or to determine the controversy upon petition in the original cause (1).

Suits and applications against receiver—It would be inconsistent with the main purpose of a receivership (to preserve property in controversy pendente lite) which devolves upon the Court the duty of protecting its possession, as well as incompatible with the dignity and authority of the Court, to allow its officer to be summoned before any tribunal in respect to the property in his hands, at the will of any and every person who has, or imagines he has, a just cause of action, or who for sinister purposes might institute a fictitious suit against him. On the other hand, to deny to those having just causes of action or claims which call for the adjudication of the Courts of Law or Equity, all opportunity for investigation and all right to a proper remedy, simply because the property to which they must look for reparation has been seized by the Court and is in its keeping, would violate the fundamental principles of personal rights. The difficulty thus presented has been overcome by requiring all those who desire to bring suit against a receiver first to obtain leave to do so from the Court which appointed him. The Court usually grants such leave unless it appears clearly from the application of the claimant that his demand has no legal foundation, the petition should therefore show a probable cause of action—one demanding adjudication by proceedings in Court (2). If a receiver duly appointed and in possession of the property in controversy, be sued without the leave of the Court appointing him first obtained, the parties who bring the suit may be subjected to proceedings in contempt of Court and punished accordingly. The proceedings in a suit so brought will generally be restrained by injunction or stayed or set aside on motion. Whether the party proceeding at law did or did not know that a receiver has been appointed over the property, or however clear his right may be, the Court will restrain the prosecution of the claim if it be instituted without leave (3). It has even been held that the consent of the Court to an action against a receiver is a condition precedent to the right to sue, and cannot be rectified by a subsequent application for permission to continue the action brought without such permission (4). But several later cases have disagreed with this (5).

It rests in the discretion of the Court to allow a party claiming rights against its receiver to bring an independent action against him or to compel such party to proceed against him by petition in the action in which he is receiver (1) When a Court is asked to give leave to sue its receiver, it may, and usually must, examine into the merits of the claim to ascertain whether a suit is necessary or proper for its adjudication, but such examination and the order made upon it cannot be used by either party as in any way affecting the merits of the case. The order simply permits a judicial investigation to be made, the examination is not itself a trial, nor is the decision an adjudication upon the merits (2)

Generally a receiver cannot be held personally liable in an action brought against him in his official capacity, the judgment being entered only so as to affect the funds in his hands (3) An action cannot be brought against a receiver by a person at whose instance he was appointed (4) If a special case be made out, the Court will allow a party to continue an action, notwithstanding that it has been commenced without leave (5)

An application for leave to sue a receiver may be made ex parte at the time of presenting the plaint and not in the suit in which the receiver has been appointed or on notice to the parties, (6) though it would appear that the latter course of applying in the suit has sometimes been followed (7) Any order declaring that leave to sue is not necessary will not bind the parties who are not present (8) that in its inception the law of receivers was a case made law of very gradual growth declared from time to time as necessity arose and with reference to the particular circumstances of the case in which the jurisdiction was exercised. Though precedent was added to precedent, there was yet no general statutory statement of the nature and extent of this form of jurisdiction which could only be ascertained by an enumeration of all the cases in which it had been exercised. This course is, however, no longer necessary or expedient. An excessive citation of case law even where it is not, as is sometimes the case, of doubtful authority or incapable to present circumstances, too often serves no other purpose than to confuse and to obscure the plain provisions of modern Statutes and Codes (1).

The effect of the English Judicature Act was to enlarge very much the powers which the Court of Chancery formerly possessed and there is now no limit to the power of the Court to appoint a receiver except that such power is only to be exercised where "just or convenient". The words have now been adopted in r 1 ante. Here again the question to be determined is one in the main if not entirely of fact. The Court may, in any pending litigation, appoint a receiver if the circumstances of the particular case require it. A Judge has, therefore, a wide discretion. But that discretion must be judicially exercised (2). Though the discretion to grant relief will in the main be influenced by the particular facts of each case it must also be guided by certain broad and well established principles which have governed previous practice and which though unexpressed may be said to underlie the provisions of the Code (3).

In the first place the jurisdiction thus given must not be lightly but most cautiously exercised (4). The relief is not one ex debito justitiæ but one which is purely within the judicial discretion of the Court. The power to appoint a receiver is not to be generally exercised as a matter of course and it is not a reason for allowing an application that it can do no harm to appoint a receiver. The appointment of a receiver is in many cases a matter for the most serious consideration for the Court by taking possession at the instance of a plaintiff may be doing a wrong in some cases irreparable, to the defendant. For if the plaintiff should eventually fail in establishing his right the Court may, by its interim interference have caused mischief to the defendant for which the subsequent restoration of the property may afford no adequate compensation (5).

In an application for the appointment of a receiver it is sufficient if a prima facie title to the property over which the receiver is sought to be appointed is made out. The removal of property has been considered a sufficient ground (6).

Pandey, 5 C W N 365 (1894). In this case a receiver was appointed of the property of the shrines of Tarakeswar, liberty being given to move to extend the rule on fresh materials. The Court directed that the conduct of the daily Shewa was not to be interfered with, and that the receiver was to pay for them out of the offerings he received, followed in Sree Ram Das v Mohabir Das 27 C. 279 (1899). And see as to removal of property, Chandlat Ji v Lalchand Singh Bahadur, 22 C. 456 (1896)

It is, of course, no ground for refusing to appoint a receiver that the acts complained of amount to a criminal offence and that a criminal prosecution is available to the petitioner.

Nextly, the situation of the property and parties must be considered.

The cases may be dealt with in the following classes —(a) where the property is in medio, (b) where the plaintiff possesses an admitted interest, (c) where the plaintiff's title is disputed by the defendant claiming under legal title, (d) miscellaneous cases (1).

Where the property is as it were in medio, in the enjoyment of no one, the Court can hardly do wrong in taking possession. It is the common interest of all parties that the Court should prevent a scramble, as where there is litigation as to the right to probate or administration (2).

The second case where plaintiff possesses an admitted interest is that of joint tenants and tenants in common in which the Courts are generally averse to interfere, (3) partition suits in which receivers are frequently appointed, (4) cases of tenant for life, remainderman, Hindu widow (5) partnership where such a state of facts is shown by the party complaining as if proven at the hearing will entitle him to a dissolution, (6) cases of trust where there are substantial grounds for the exercise of the jurisdiction, (7) infancy, the property and interests of infants being under the peculiar and exclusive care of the Court of Chancery, (8) and lunacy (9).

Thirdly, there are the cases of disputed title. If a right is asserted to property in the possession of the defendant claiming to hold under a legal title generally, a strong case is required to be made out. There must be some equity, danger of waste, fraud, abuse of trust or the like, or want of reasonable appearance of title (10).

Then, lastly, there are miscellaneous cases, (11) on contract, covenant, conveyance, lease, debtor and creditor, mortgages (12) and other cases (13) in which general principles may receive some modification from the peculiar circumstances of the case

Hitherto property the subject of a suit has been considered, but a receiver may also be appointed of property under attachment. The appointment of a receiver at the instance of a judgment creditor is known in English practice as equitable execution (1). A proceeding under the Code has nothing in common (beyond the fact that a receiver is appointed) with "equitable execution" (2). The application for a receiver may be made either by the judgment creditor or debtor, and in some cases it is as much to the interest of the first as of the second (3). Attachments are not superseded by the appointment of a manager (4). The proceeding does not change the property in the subject which is attached and affected by it (5). The fact that property under attachment is in the hands of a receiver does not protect it from attachment of all other creditors (6). A receiver may be appointed without the consent of the decree holder (7). The scope of the powers and duties of receivers of attached property are wider than those of managers under the Code of 1859 (8). "Powers of the owner," referred to in s. 11 must be read in connection with other provisions of the Code (9). When a debt due from a third person to the judgment-debtor is attached in the hands of the person who owes it, the Court may, if necessary, appoint a manager to sue for it (10). A receiver appointed in execution may sue for any debts attached, (11) may be conferred under r 1 in respect of property belonging to the judgment debtor not attached in the suit in which the order was made (1) If grounds be shown for such a course the receiver may on the application of the parties be removed (2)

Rights and powers. (a) General—It may be said in a general way that a receiver has no powers except such as are conferred upon him by the order by which he is appointed, and by the practice and usage of the Court. He is merely an officer of the Court—his holding is the holding of the Court—he is but a minister, and therefore has not the discretionary power of a person acting in a fiduciary character. In theory the Court itself has the care of the property in his hands. He can do nothing likely to seriously diminish the fund without the special leave of the Court. He is not however merely the assignee of him whose property is placed in his care, but he may exercise such power in dealing with the property as belong to a receiver according to the practice of the Court and as are particularly conferred upon him by the order of his appointment (3) Under the Code the Court may grant to the receiver all such powers as to bringing and defending suits and for the realization, management, protection preservation, and improvement of the property, the collection of the rents and profits thereof, the application and disposal of such rents and profits, and the execution of instruments in writing as the owner himself has or such of those powers as the Court thinks fit (4) A receiver is at all times subject to the control of the Court which possesses the power to make all necessary orders for the control of receivers appointed by it (5) He has a right to the protection of the Court and his possession will not be allowed to be disturbed (6) The Court will see that he carries out his functions and will protect the agent appointed under its orders (7) The scope of the receivership may be extended

(b) Discretion—In many matters of care and management receivers are allowed to use their own discretion subject to the control and approval of the Court. But in all important matters a receiver should apply for and obtain the direction of the Court which appoints him (8)

(c) Application for instructions—A receiver has a right to apply to the Court for instructions when a question arises as to what may be his duty under its orders (9)

(d) Delegation—A receiver is not justified in delegating or entrusting to another a duty entrusted to him by the Court. If he does so, and thereby causes loss to the estate, he is bound to make it good (10)

(e) Possession—It is both the receiver's power and duty to take possession of the property whether moveable or immoveable over which he is appointed. Where a receiver is appointed by the Court to get in outstanding personal property, it is his duty to collect all he can get in. The power of a receiver to take property implies a correlative duty on the part of any one having it in his possession to deliver it to him, and such holder violates the law in resisting the exercise of the lawful authority of the receiver (1).

(f) Leases—If tenants in possession of property over which a receiver is appointed are directed by the order to attorn to him, the receiver should, as soon as his appointment is complete, call on them to attorn accordingly, and if they refuse, application should be made to the Court. The receiver is entitled to all the rents in arrear at the date of his appointment and to all the rents which accrue during the continuance of his receivership, and an order will, if necessary, be made for payment (2). As to power to serve notice to quit and sue see below (3). As regards the power of leasing, it is created by the order appointing the receiver who has no estate or interest in himself which enables him to lease. It is common to grant such powers of lease for a limited period usually three years but whenever it is desired to lease for a longer term, the sanction of the Court must be obtained (4).

(g) Sales—As to the practice of the High Court in assisting purchasers at receiver's sales (5) and sale by receiver during administration (6) see cases cited. Liens upon property held by a receiver are not divested by virtue of a sale made by him (7). A sale by the receiver, made under the order of Court, cannot, in the absence of fraud, be attacked collaterally by persons who were parties to the proceedings or their representatives (8). When a suit has been dismissed the Court has no jurisdiction to give the receiver any fresh power, as for instance, liberty to sell (9).

(h) Borrowing—If a receiver requires money to discharge his duties the Court will give him leave to borrow upon the security of the property in his

(i) Payment — As to payments out by receiver, see note (3)

(j) Suits by or defended by receiver — With regard to suits by a receiver two questions require consideration, namely, as to his right to sue in general and as to the name in which he should sue. One of the most important functions exercised by receivers in the discharge of their official duties is that of bringing such actions as may be necessary to the proper discharge of their trust as well as to secure and protect the assets and funds to whose control they are entitled by virtue of their appointment (4). As a general rule all rights of action which belong to the party whose property is put into the hands of a receiver are transferred to the latter by virtue of his appointment (5). The appointment does not affect existing contracts or rights of action between the party whose property is placed in the hands of a receiver and others, he has no greater rights or advantages than those possessed by his principal (6). A receiver, therefore, cannot maintain an action upon a note or obligation running to the original party which he himself could not have maintained (7). His right of action relates back to the beginning of the title in the party for whose property he is receiver if substituted in place of the owners of the property he acquires all their rights by subrogation (8). Inasmuch as for the purpose of actions and suits connected with the receivership, receivers occupy substantially the same relation which was occupied by the original parties against whom or over whose estate they were appointed, any defence which a defendant might have made to an action brought by the original party in interest is equally available, and may be made with like effect when the action is instituted by the receiver (9). The fact that a person is an officer of the Court entitles him to no privileges not accorded to other suitors, and in seeking relief he must commence his actions by the same process that other suitors are required to employ (10). A receiver's liability for costs in an action instituted by him on behalf of the estate is similar to that of any other trustee—as, e.g., an executor or administrator—who sues for the interest of an estate, but being an officer of the Court, he usually receives special consideration (11). Should he fail in his action he will of course, be directed to pay the costs of the defendant, but as between himself and the estate he represents, he will, if he has acted properly, with care and in good faith, be allowed his costs out of any funds which are in, or may come to his hands (1) Such an order in favour of a receiver will, however, generally, only be made in the suit in which he has been appointed, and not in the suit brought by him, unless in such latter suit the estate which he represents is fully before the Court. Since, however, a receiver sues in a representative capacity and not in his personal right it is necessary that a suit should be brought by him in the matter of allowing them to bring suits concerning their receivership, and an action brought by a receiver is considered as brought under the order of the Court itself. If, therefore, a suit is instituted on of the Court against the receiver, who will be directed to discontinue the action (2) The usual practice, both in England and America (3) and in this country, before instituting actions by a receiver in matters connected with his trust, is to apply to the Court, from which he derives his appointment, for leave to bring such action. And, although it is frequently the case that the order of appointment in general terms authorizes the receiver to sue for and collect all demands due, yet it is a common and a safe practice to first obtain special leave of Court before beginning the action. In order to avoid the necessity of frequent application to the Court for liberty to sue, it has become customary to give to the receiver in the order by which he is appointed general leave, but as the authority to sue conferred by the order of appointment is confined to such suits as are contemplated by the order, (4) and doubt may arise whether the particular suit brought is within the terms of the authority, it is customary, as above stated to obtain special leave in each case. Proof of the appointment of the receiver and of leave to sue is generally given by the production of a certified copy of the respective orders. It seems to be established that the regularity, propriety, or necessity of the appointment of a receiver is not to be questioned in a merely collateral action at least by parties or privies to the action in which the appointment was made. As to the rights of other parties in this respect there seems to be a difference of opinion. It has been said to be probable that those who were entire strangers to the original proceedings should be allowed in a collateral action where their interests are affected by the appointment to attack the order on the ground that it was procured through fraud, collusion, or deception practised on the Court, but for no other reason (5) The general doctrine recognizing a receiver as the officer of the Court is not to and authority to sue. As to cases where, having an independent cause of action, the fact that a person is receiver does not disqualify him from suing, and in which case he does not sue in his character of receiver, see Kerr, 164

be understood as limiting or restricting his rights in the management of a suit which he has once undertaken, and after entering upon a litigation he is regarded as being entitled to all the freedom of action of any other suitor, and the fact that he appeals from a decision which is against him is not of itself evidence of bad faith or of mismanagement of his trust, and may be a meritorious rather than a censurable act (1)

Some conflict of authority exists whether, in the absence of the special authority, a receiver may sue in his own name or in the name of the original party in whose favour the action accrued. In the first case a distinction must

a receiver, who is holder of a bill of exchange, may by the law merchant sue in his own name; (2) also when, as bailee, he has a special property in the goods, (3) or if he is possessed of chattels and those chattels are unlawfully detained from him. So, too, after a tenant has attorned to the receiver and so created a tenancy between him and the receiver, the latter may distrain upon the tenant in his own name, and on his own authority without leave obtained from the Court, (4) and there may be other cases in which, having an independent cause of action, the fact that he is receiver does not disqualify him from suing (5). In other cases, however, and where the receiver is suing in respect of a cause of action which has accrued to him in his representative capacity from the party whose estate he holds, the prevalent rule appears to be that where the matter is not controlled by statute or order of the Court the receiver should sue not in his own name, but in that of the parties whose estate he holds (6). But this view is stated (7) to be losing ground and has not always been adhered to either in America (8) or England, (9) and it has been held in the former country that a receiver by virtue of his appointment is a quasi assignee invested with title to such an extent at least as will enable him to sue in his official character (1) Where the order appointing the receiver gives him power to sue in his own name or in the names of the parties to the suit, it might well be held that such an order merely entitles the receiver to sue in his own name in cases in which such action is proper, and in all other cases to use the names of the parties It has, however, been decided that the Court had authority under sect 503 (now r 1) to confer on a receiver the power to sue in his own name, and that if the order appointing the receiver gives him liberty, he may do so in any case (2) Where the receiver is permitted to sue in the names of the parties and does so, no action on their part is necessary (3) A receiver of attached property may also sue He does not represent the estate for all purposes He would have none of the powers which may be conferred under r 1 in respect of property belonging to the judgment debtor not attached in the suit in which the order was made (4) It has been held that where a receiver institutes proceedings, and is then replaced by another receiver, it is necessary that the new receiver should be made a party to those proceedings (5)

The necessity for permission extends not merely to suits brought by, but also to suits defended by, the receiver (6) The proper rule as regards applications in respect of the estate is that they should be made by the persons beneficially entitled, and not by the receiver, though it must be admitted that receivers have often originated proceedings in their own name (7)

(A) Indemnity—A receiver is entitled to be indemnified out of his estate in respect of all costs, and charges, and expenses, properly incurred by him in the discharge of his office or under the order of the Court (8)

A receiver is entitled to his costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred in the discharge of his duties (9) A receiver may be entitled to allowances beyond his salary for any extraordinary trouble or expense (10) The receiver is entitled to be paid next after the costs of realizing the estate As the officer of the Court the Court is bound to see that he is paid (11)

(m) Lien.—He has a lien on the estate for his claims and allowances (1)

Duties and liabilities of receiver—He is, as an officer of the Court, strictly amenable for his acts and accountable to the Court (2) which appoints (3) him. His first duty is to obey the order of the Court appointing him (4). He is not liable for acts done under the order of the Court (5). He should be strictly impartial, as he is appointed for the benefit not merely of the party on whose application the appointment is made, but equally for the benefit of all persons who may establish rights in the case (6). Many of the receiver's duties have been alluded to in dealing with his rights and powers. So his right to take possession implies also a duty to do so. He is responsible for any loss occasioned to the estate from his wilful default or gross negligence (7). He ought to appear and give all necessary information to the Court in all applications for payment of money (8). He is liable to account (9). He should keep correct and accurate accounts with vouchers (10) and should file them with regularity and promptitude, (11) showing that all disbursements are payments properly made in respect of the estate (12). A receiver may be ordered to account although the suit in which he was appointed may be no longer pending (13). R 4 is new and contains important provisions in this respect. It has been drafted on the lines of sect 18 (4) of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907. The original proposal to imprison receivers was considered too wide, and has been omitted.

Jurisdiction to remove and discharge—The power to terminate flows naturally and as a necessary sequence from the power to create. The power of the Court to remove or discharge a receiver whom it has appointed may be exercised at any stage of the litigation. It is a necessary adjunct of that power of appointment, and is exercised as an incident to or consequence of that power, the authority to call such officer into being necessarily implying the authority to terminate his functions when their exercise is no longer necessary, or to remove the incumbent for an abuse of those functions or for other cause shown, and the cases upon this branch of the subject will resolve themselves into two classes, viz cases of removal or substitution for cause and cases of final discharge because of the necessity of the appointment having ceased to exist (14).

A distinction indicated by the terms themselves is to be drawn between the removal and the discharge of a receiver. The discharge of the receiver is, in general, the termination of the receivership, while the removal of the receiver upon his own motion or for cause and the substitution of another person or persons in his stead, is a proceeding not inconsistent with the continuance of the receivership. The rules of law, however, which regulate the removal of a receiver are, in general, applicable to the case of his discharge. A receiver is removed when it is made to appear that the interests of the parties concerned require it, and a receiver is discharged when the objects sought to be obtained by his appointment have been accomplished. In the one case the property in litigation continues in the possession of the Court, subject to the final decree while in the other case it passes pursuant to the decree to the party entitled. The power of removal being incident to the power of appointment, the Court, whose officer the receiver is, may in a proper case direct his removal, and may impose such conditions in connection therewith as seem just. The Court is not limited in respect of time in the matter of the removal of the receiver, but may act thereon whenever it seems proper and at any stage of the litigation.

As regards the power of the Court to remove a receiver for cause and to substitute another in his stead, it is to be observed that the exercise of the power is regarded as a matter properly vesting in the sound discretion of the Court, and hence to be governed by the circumstances of the particular case. It is difficult therefore, to frame any definite rules susceptible of general application, and the power of removal for cause is referred to the broad and undefined region of the discretionary jurisdiction of Courts of Equity (1). The removal of a receiver and the appointment of another in his stead does not have the effect of invalidating claims against the former receivership, since the management of the estate is one and the same, though it becomes necessary to change the receiver (2). All proceedings which directly affect the receivership ought regularly to be commenced in the same suit and before the same Court in which the appointment of the receiver was made. Accordingly a proceeding to remove or suspend a receiver must be commenced by motion in the suit in which he was appointed. It was the early rule in Equity that the application for the removal of the receiver could be made only to the Court by which he had been appointed and whose officer he was (3).

The motion in receiver, or in the order upon further consideration (4)

(3) Ib., it is here pointed out that this doctrine has been essentially modified in the United States, in which a receiver may under various circumstances be removed by Courts other than that by which he was appointed. This qualification of the rule was an almost necessary outgrowth of the complex system of State and Federal Courts and of the power of the removal of causes from one of these classes of Courts into the other. It is also sometimes provided for by Statute. See Budd v. Nath Paul Chowdhry, 1 Bycaunt v. Nath Paul Chowdhry, 2 Tayl. & Bell 192, 193 [a receiver is only amenable for his acts as an accountable to the Court appointing him]

Removal of the receiver.—As already observed, this may take place either upon the application of the receiver himself appointed in the cause or upon the application of the parties thereto, over whose property he has been appointed

(a) Upon his own application.—It is not, in general, the policy of the Courts to remove a receiver upon his own application after he has once accepted the office and entered upon the discharge of his duties. This is the rule partly because of the unwillingness of the Courts to charge the estate with the expense of such a proceeding, and partly because it is contrary to the theory upon which justice is administered in a Court of Equity to allow changes of this nature, which necessarily cause delay in collecting and settling the affairs of the estate affected by the receivership. It may be laid down, therefore, as a settled rule that the Court will not remove or discharge a receiver except where good cause therefor can be shown, and it seems also that, generally, this must be something arising subsequently to the acceptance of the office (1). Accordingly, where the receiver accepted the office at the request of the defendant, and was subsequently incapacitated from performing the duties of his office by reason of blindness, he was discharged upon his own petition, (2) but where the motion for relief was based upon the fact that the duties of the receivership interfered with the receiver's own private business, the application was refused (3). In a case where the receiver wanted to go to Europe on his own affairs and remain a year, the Court allowed the receiver to be discharged, gave him his costs and appointed a new receiver (4). A receiver who wishes to be discharged and cannot show any reasonable cause for putting the parties to the expense of a change, will not be discharged on his own request unless on the terms of his paying the costs of the appointment of another receiver and consequent thereon, but where a receiver had acted for many years and had paid in his balance, the Court would not charge him with the costs of the removal and the appointment of a new receiver (5).

(b) Upon the application of the parties.—It is, as of course an elementary proposition that a Court of Equity will not sanction or continue a receivership which has been created collusively or fraudulently, and that a receiver so appointed will be removed upon proof that the appointment was made by collusion between the parties or in fraud of the rights of any of the parties interested (6). When it subsequently appears that the appointment was improvidently made, the Court may unquestionably vacate the appointment and thus remove the receiver, but the Court may properly require as a condition precedent to an order vacating the appointment that the receiver's expenses and compensation be provided for by the moving party. Where the receiver's security is insufficient the Court may remove him summarily, and direct the delivery of all the assets to his successor, if he neglect or refuse to procure additional sureties (1) Where a receiver becomes bankrupt he will be discharged and a new receiver appointed (2) If a receiver has been wrongly appointed over property of a person not a party to the cause he will be discharged although there has been an abatement by the death of the sole defendant (3) When a receiver has been appointed temporarily in an ex parte proceeding, or before answer, and it subsequently appears from the defendant's pleading or otherwise that the appointment ought not to have been made, or that the complainant has presented no case for the intervention of a Court of Equity, it is proper that the receiver should be removed So where it is made to appear that there was no necessity for the appointment of the receiver, or where it is shown to the satisfaction of the Court that all the usual grounds for the appointment of a receiver—such as imminent danger to the property, fraud, insolvency, and the like—are wanting, the Court will remove the receiver and restore the status quo But where a receiver enters in good faith upon the discharge of his duties and the parties in interest acquiesce for a considerable time, their laches may be such as to defeat a subsequent application on their part looking to the removal of the receiver (4)

Since absolute impartiality as between the parties to the litigation is an indispensable qualification of a receiver, upon an application for his removal the Court may properly consider his past relations to the parties as well as his present sympathies And when it is shown that he was the nominee of one hostile party and bitterly opposed by the other, and that he was appointed under the mistaken belief that all interests had united in his selection, and that by reason of his interest his efficiency as an officer of the Court is impaired, it is proper to remove him (5) The mere fact of relationship between the receiver and the plaintiff in the action in which he was appointed, is not, of itself, sufficient ground for his removal, such relationship affording at the most, merely a circumstance to be taken into consideration at the time of his appointment, it being the general rule that no relative of either of the parties ought to be selected as receiver But where, in addition to relationship, bias and improper conduct are shown a ground is made for his removal (6)

It is an established rule that a receiver will not be arbitrarily removed and another person substituted in his place in the absence of a substantial ground, merely because certain parties in interest desire it But it is competent for the Court to remove one receiver, and to substitute another in his stead, by consent of all parties when the proceedings are bona fide, and when there is no attempt to traffic in the receivership (7) Where a receiver had been appointed

The rule that a receiver may be removed for misconduct or breach of trust arises out of the nature of the office, and the supervising power of the Court of Chancery. Whenever the receiver is guilty of misfeasance or malfeasance in office it is the duty of the Court to call him to account, and in a proper case it has the undoubted right to order a summary removal (1). Either mismanagement or incompetence is a ground for removing a receiver (2). A receiver will be removed if his appointment has been an improper one, (3) if he is irregular in carrying in and passing his accounts, (4) if his conduct has been such as to impede the impartial course of justice, (5) or to amount to gross dereliction of duty, (6) and when a receiver appointed on behalf of incumbrancers has been guilty of gross negligence in the discharge of his duties, he may be removed upon their application, and may be required to pay interest upon the balances from time to time in his hands, and to pay the costs of the proceedings for his removal (7).

Final discharge of the receiver—The discharge of a receiver may take place either during the course of the proceedings or at the conclusion of the litigation. A receiver is generally continued until judgment, but according to the decision undermentioned, (8) if the right of the plaintiff ceases before that time the receiver may be discharged, and cannot be continued at the instance of the defendant. In this case the plaintiff claiming to be an equitable creditor or incumbrancer of the defendant had obtained a receiver of the rents and profits of defendant's real estate upon which he claimed to have a charge. Defendant having paid and plaintiff having received the amount claimed to be due the receiver was discharged, although other defendants claiming to have annuities or incumbrances upon the same property objected, and asked to be heard against the discharge. Lord Eldon said, "I apprehend that with the right of the plaintiff to have the receiver must fall the rights of the other parties. It would be most extraordinary if, because a receiver has been appointed on behalf of the plaintiff, any defendant is entitled to have a receiver appointed on his behalf. My decided opinion is that the order for the receiver must be discharged, and that all falls together. In however a subsequent case (9) the Master of the Rolls said "There is no doubt that where a receiver is appointed under the authority of the Court he is appointed for the benefit of all parties interested, and therefore he will not be discharged merely upon the application of the party at whose instance he was appointed" (10). If during the course of the proceedings the continuance of a receiver becomes unnecessary, or the object of the receivership is attained, the receiver will be discharged (1)

While the propriety of discharging a receiver, like that of appointing him, is to some extent a matter of judicial discretion, yet in some cases the right to a discharge becomes an absolute right which the Court has no discretion to refuse (2) In such a case, therefore, the granting of the order of discharge is not a matter of discretion, but its refusal is error which may be reversed on appeal (3)

In general a receiver will not be discharged until the object for which he was appointed has been fully accomplished, or until the Court is satisfied that the exigency calling for a receiver has ceased (4) Since the final decree in the cause is generally decisive of the subject matter in controversy, and determines the right to the possession of the fund or property held by the receiver, it is usually the case that such decree supersedes the functions of the receiver since there is then nothing further for him to act upon If, on the other hand, the result be favourable to the defendant, the functions of the receiver are at an end, and it is proper to order him to account and be discharged (5) An order of dismissal of the suit which follows on the reversal of an order appointing a receiver clearly operates as a discharge of the receiver (6)

Under the Civil Procedure Code, once a suit has been dismissed, the Court dismissing it is functus officio except that it may stay execution of its own decree or order for costs Its jurisdiction extends no further in regard to a suit which has ceased to be a pending suit (7) If, on the other hand the controversy terminates favourably to the plaintiff or the party at whose instance the receiver was appointed, it will usually devolve upon him to carry out the decree of the Court according to the nature of the receivership and his powers under the decree (8) It has been said that the determination of the suit, however will not, ipso facto, discharge the receiver, but his functions must be terminated by a formal order of Court (9)

Unless the minutes of the order appointing or continuing a receiver and manager contain a provision for his discharge, an application to the Court is in general necessary to divest the possession of the receiver The appointment of a receiver made previous to judgment will not be superseded by it unless the receiver is only appointed until judgment or further order (10) The receiver may, however, be continued by the decree (11) The Court has jurisdiction notwithstanding a receiver has been discharged, to surcharge him in his accounts, (12) or to order him to pay his balance together with the amount allowed him for his salary and interest (13)

The decree may direct a permanent appointment, in which case the discharge of the receiver is a matter of discretion (1)

Discharge of sureties.—The sureties of a receiver will not be discharged at their own request, and no regard will be had to their application unless it is for the benefit of the estate or unless there be special circumstances in the case, (2) as for instance where underhand practice can be proved, and the person secured can be shown to be connected with such practice (3) Where also a surety had become such in violation of partnership articles, he was discharged on his own application (4) When a surety procures his discharge during his continuance of the receivership, the receiver must enter into a fresh recognizance with new sureties When a surety becomes bankrupt the receiver is usually required to enter into a fresh recognizance with two or more sureties If a surety dies without leaving any property available for the satisfaction of the recognizance, the Court will direct a new surety to be appointed, but the rule is otherwise where he leaves real property bound by his recognizance (5) The condition of the bond is that if the receiver shall from time to time, and at all times so long as he shall continue as receiver, duly and faithfully in all respects discharge the duties and obligations which devolve upon him and duly pass his accounts, then the bond shall be paid, but otherwise it will remain in full force (6)

If the receiver faithfully discharges his duties and passes his accounts and pays the balance due by him, the surety is discharged, and he is at liberty to apply to have the recognizance vacated as to him Should this be not so, an action must be brought on his bond against the surety who is answerable to the extent of the amount of the recognizance for whatever sum of money, whether principal, interest, or costs, the receiver has become liable for, including the costs of his removal, and of the appointment of a new receiver in his place In ascertaining the liability of the surety the Court proceeds upon the principle that the surety is liable (to the extent of the amount of the penalty) for all sums of money which the receiver himself was properly liable to pay into Court or account for (7)

A surety who has been compelled to pay money on account of his obligation is entitled to be reimbursed out of the balance in the receiver's hands, Lord Eldon saying. "As the receiver is an officer of the Court, and the surety is so in a sense, if there is anything due on account between them, justice requires that, upon the application of the surety, he shall be indemnified for what he has paid for the receiver out of the balance due him" (8) And a surety who pays the debt of his principal has the same right against his co surety that he has against the principal, and will be permitted to put the bond in suit as against the co-surety (9)

Appeal—It was held under sect 588 of the 1st Code (now represented by O XLIII) that an order authorizing a receiver to remove any person in possession of the property was appealable, under that section, at the instance of the person dispossessed, (1) and it has also been held that under O XLIII r 1, cl (s) a final, but not an interlocutory order, appointing a receiver is appealable (2) and also that directions given by a Court in passing a receiver's accounts are not appealable (3)

ORDER XII.

Appeals from Original Decrees

1 (1) Every appeal shall be preferred in the form of a memorandum signed by the appellant or his pleader and presented to the Court or to such officer as it appoints in this behalf. The memorandum shall be accompanied by a copy of the decree appealed from and (unless the Appellate Court dispenses therewith) of the judgment on which it is founded.

(2) The memorandum shall set forth, concisely and under distinct heads, the grounds of objection to the decree appealed from without any argument or narrative, and such grounds shall be numbered consecutively.

Memorandum of appeal.—The Appellate Court must look at the memorandum of appeal itself and not at the stamp on it in order to see which part of a decree is the subject of appeal before it. The Court can no more deal with a part of a decree which is not challenged by a memorandum of appeal or by objections filed by the opposite party than it can pass an order reversing the decree of a first Court when that decree is not in appeal before it. The memorandum of appeal or objections when filed are what give the Judge on appeal jurisdiction to interfere with the decree below. He cannot of his own motion deal with a decree which is not the subject of appeal to him or with a portion of a decree against which portion there has been no appeal and no objections filed. The Appellate Court has no jurisdiction to deal with that portion of the decree which is not the subject of appeal before it (1). The Code does not make any provision as to how Courts should deal with memoranda of appeal containing scandalous matter, but Courts possess inherent power to stop such an abuse of its records (2).

"Presented."—In order to effect a valid presentation of an appeal it must be by the suitor in person or by a person duly qualified to present it, (3) and where an advocate or vakil is heard the grounds should have been duly certified (1) Though in the takalatnama filed in the Court below the names of two wakils were entered, and though the takalatnama was accepted only by one of them yet the presentation of the appeal by the pleader, who accepted the takalatnama, was considered a sufficient presentation (2) But where by an oversight the name of the takil who had filed an appeal was omitted from the body of his takalatnama, it was held, on objection taken by the respondents, that the document was invalid and the appeal had not been properly presented (3) If an appeal, being in reality a first appeal from a decree, is erroneously described as "First appeal from order" in the memorandum of appeal, and it is shown that neither respondent was in any way prejudiced by such misdescription or an insufficient stamp was placed on the memorandum by reason thereof, the appeal should not be dismissed for such misdescription (4) It has been held that there is no proper presentation when the court fees due have not been paid, (5) but as regards subsequent affixing not having retrospective effect the first set of cases were decided before the enactment of sect 582A of the last Code (see now sect 149), which was intended to cover cases where the insufficiency of the stamp upon the memorandum of appeal was due to mistake (6)

"Accompanied by a copy of the decree"—In appeals against decrees in suits or proceedings tantamount to a suit (e.g. contentious probate proceedings) it is necessary that the memorandum of appeal should be accompanied by a copy of the decree and a copy of the decree is a necessary accompaniment for a valid appeal (7) The Court has no power to exempt an appellant from production of a copy of the decree, but (if satisfied that the discretion vested in it under sect 5 of the Limitation Act should be exercised) it may make an order that a certified copy of the decree may be received and allowed to be attached to the memorandum of appeal (8) But in cases of appeals against orders under sect 244 (now sect 47) (which are decrees under sect 2) it is sufficient to attach to the memorandum a copy of the order itself (which is the decree, and no other decree is necessary), and it is not necessary to attach a copy of the decree even if such a decree may have been drawn up (9) The provisions of this rule as extended to second appeals by sect 108 do not require that any other documents should be presented with the appeal than a copy of the decree against which the appeal is presented and the judgment on which it is founded. It is not necessary to file a copy of the first Court's decree. If an appellant relies on the original judgment, and decree in support of a second appeal, he may reasonably be called on by the Court to produce copies when applying for admission of second appeal. In other cases it is vexatious to insist on parties incurring useless expense and trouble (1).

"And of the judgment."—Where the parties in two or more suits are the same, and the decision in one case governs all the cases, then if the appellant file copies of the judgment and decree passed in the principal case this may be considered a sufficient compliance with the law, but if the parties in each case be different, it is not sufficient for the appellant to refer to a case with which he has nothing to do, and to say that the judgment of the Lower Court in that case governs his, and that it has been filed by another appellant with whom he has no privity (2). In appeals under clause 10 of the Allahabad Letters Patent under the rules of that High Court a copy of the judgment appealed from is required to be presented with the memorandum of appeal (3).

2 The appellant shall not, except by leave of the Court, [s. 105] urge or be heard in support of any ground of objection not set forth in the memorandum of appeal; but the Appellate Court, in deciding the appeal, shall not be confined to the grounds of objection set forth in the memorandum of appeal or taken by leave of the Court under this rule

Provided that the Court shall not rest its decision on any other ground unless the party who may be affected thereby has had a sufficient opportunity of contesting the case on that ground

Grounds of appeal.—The grounds which may be taken without leave under this rule are those only set out in the memorandum (4). An objection which may be heard under sect 105 (formerly sect 591) must be one set forth in the memorandum of appeal (5) and the Court has a discretion to grant or refuse leave, (6) which is not taken away even when the point sought to be raised is one of limitation (7). are set out by reason of the fact that they raise a new case or points not the subject of determination in the lower Court. Generally speaking, in these cases pure points of law only are arguable which arise on the findings and require no further inquiry. This subject will be found discussed under the heading "Scope of the appeal" in the notes to sects 100 and 101, ante. This rule is equally applicable to second as to first appeals (1).

Grounds of appeal must be such as arise from out of the plaintiff's pleadings and documentary proofs and necessary to the decision of the appeal (2). In drawing up grounds of appeal it should (it has been held) be remembered that no subsequent event or devolution of interest can effect the decision of a question as it stood at the time the decision was pronounced. To give effect to these, some supplementary proceeding and not an appeal is necessary (3). Points not taken in the memorandum of appeal, if they raise questions of fact, upon which the findings arrived at by the Court of Appeal must be taken to be conclusive, will not be allowed to be taken in special appeal (4).

If the appellant thinks that his grounds of appeal in the memorandum filed with the Judge are not sufficient, he may apply to the Judge to allow him to be heard upon the objections not mentioned in the memorandum of appeal, but if he does not do so, nor does he even make the objections upon which he relies before the High Courts previously to his appealing to that Court, he cannot ask the High Court to reverse the decision of the Judge of the Lower Appellate Court because he did not reverse the decision of the first Court on grounds which were never mentioned in appeal, or not brought to the notice of the Judge of the Lower Appellate Court (5). The Court however, itself is not limited by the grounds of objection. It is entirely within the competency of the Court to take into its consideration anything in the case which either affects the regularity of the proceedings of the Court below, or relates to the correctness of the decision upon the merits, and the Court is not confined to the grounds set forth in the memorandum of appeal (6). This rule confers upon Courts power to decide appeals upon grounds other than those set forth by the appellant in the memorandum, and that power is to be exercised by the Court alone, and not to enable the appellant to take the respondent by surprise by urging matters of which he had no notice. Parties, however, complaining of judgments and decrees must mention all the grounds of complaint in the memorandum of appeal, and these provisions are not meant to relieve them of such necessity (7). As a rule the High Court will not permit grounds of appeal to be taken in argument which have not been taken in the memorandum of appeal, but where a decree comes before it which upon its very face is illegal—a decree which goes beyond the power of the Court which passed it—the High Court is bound to take up the point itself and rectify the mistake, and not to allow itself to become an instrument for the commission of further mistakes (1) An Appellate Court exceeds its authority in giving a plaintiff a relief for which he does not ask. Although the Court may decide an appeal before it upon grounds other than those stated in the memorandum of appeal, yet the rule does not entitle the Court to go beyond the subject matter of appeal (2)

Where a Lower Appellate Court allowed an appellant (one of the defendants interested in a small portion of the decree) to raise an objection verbally (and not taken in the memorandum of appeal) to the whole of the decree, and dismissed the suit on the ground of non joinder of parties, it was held by the High Court that it was not open to the Judge upon the appeal of only one of the defendants as to a small portion of the decree to entertain the objection upon which he had thrown out the suit (3) When a Lower Appellate Court dismissed a suit on a point on which no issue was raised although it had been taken in the written statement, and which was not made a ground of appeal it was held by the High Court that the point must be considered to have been abandoned at the trial, it was therefore not open to the Lower Appellate Court to dismiss the suit on that ground (4)

3 (1) Where the memorandum of appeal is not drawn up in the manner hereinbefore prescribed, Rejection or amendment of memorandum it may be rejected, or be returned to the appellant for the purpose of being amended within a time to be fixed by the Court or be amended then and there

(2) Where the Court rejects any memorandum it shall record the reasons for such rejection

(3) Where a memorandum of appeal is amended the Judge, or such officer as he appoints in this behalf shall sign or initial the amendment

Rejection or amendment of memorandum—The memorandum may be rejected under this rule if it is not drawn up in the manner prescribed, (5) as also on any of the grounds set out in O VII r 11 (formerly sect 54) read with sect 107 (formerly 582) (6) but a judicial order should be passed, and the reasons for such rejection must be given (7)

Memo appeal insufficiently stamped—When a memo of appeal which is insufficiently stamped is returned in order that it may be sufficiently stamped the Appellate Court should fix a time within which the deficiency is to be supplied (8) In this rule there is no limitation as to the time when a memorandum may be rejected or amended (1) But the time for rejection is when the appeal is presented, and not after it has been once admitted (2) The filing of an appeal out of time is another matter The registration is a ministerial proceeding And when registered out of time, the Court may, on discovery, reject it (3) where there is fraud misrepresentation, suppression of fact, or mistake (4) An order admitting an appeal after time, made ex parte by a single Judge of the High Court sitting to receive applications for the admission of appeals under a rule of the Court made under 24 & 25 Vict c 101, sect 13, and sect 27 of the Letters Patent of the Allahabad High Court, can be impugned and set aside at the hearing by the Division Court before which it is brought for hearing, on the ground that the reasons assigned for admitting it were erroneous and inadequate (5) The High Court in special appeals can look into the grounds which the Lower Appellate Court Judge has given for admitting the appeal in which the decision appealed against was passed after the lapse of the period of limitation and the grounds upon which he acted in so admitting it as a matter of opinion or prejudice, or where the discretion is exercised without any proper legal material to support it Where the exercise of discretion is perverse, the High Court in second appeal will interfere (7)

4 Where there are more plaintiffs or more defendants than one in a suit, and the decree appealed from proceeds on any ground common to all the plaintiffs or to all the defendants, any one of the plaintiffs or of the defendants may appeal from the whole decree, and thereupon the Appellate Court may reverse or vary the decree in favour of all the plaintiffs or defendants, as the case may be

Decree proceeding on common ground—The ordinary rule is that upon an appeal of one of several parties an Appellate Court cannot reverse the decree appealed from as against any other of the parties, (8) nor can the Appellate Court on the appeal of one defendant, having only a part interest in a decree, reverse the entire decree (9) It is not competent to certain defendants appealing and making a non appealing defendant a respondent, between themselves, to open out that portion of the case which, as between the plaintiff and the non appealing defendant, has not been appealed against and when the ground on which the decision is given is not common to all the defendants this rule does not apply (1) But when the decision of the first Court proceeds on grounds common to all the defendants, one of the defendants is justified in appealing on behalf of all (2) Thus where, on the appeal of one of the several judgment debtors, the bond on which the plaintiff sued was found to be false and not binding at all, all the other parties to the bond were released notwithstanding that they did not appeal (3) It is incongruous that a claim should be dismissed as against one party and allowed against another on contradictory grounds, as say in the first case on the ground that a mortgage is satisfied, and in the second on the ground that the mortgage had not been discharged It is to prevent such incongruities that power is conferred when an appeal is presented against the whole decree to interfere as well on behalf of parties who have not appealed as on behalf of those who have appealed (4) No distinction is made between decrees ex parte and others (5) Where there is a common ground among plaintiffs or defendants in appeal by one is virtually an appeal by all though they may not be parties to the record (6) It is not directed that the Appellate Court should pass a decree in favour of persons who are not before it in appeal but the effect of the provision is to make a decree passed in favour of one out of the defendants or plaintiffs operate in favour of all the plaintiffs or defendants as the case may be (7) The decree which may be the subject of such appeal is one affecting in the same manner all the plaintiffs and defendants—one incapable of division and upon which it would be impossible for a Court to find in one sense for some of the plaintiffs or defendants and in the opposite sense for the other plaintiffs or defendants for instance where the suit relates to property in which all the plaintiffs or all the defendants are co sharers (8) If one of the several defendants appeal not against the whole decree but only against that portion of it which affects him and his defence in the Lower Court was not a defence common to other defendants the Lower Court decree cannot be reversed in favour of those defendants who have not appealed (9) In a recent case where a lambardar had appealed against a decree without joining his co defendants (his tenants) it was held that under this rule it was open to him to obtain a reversal of the decree in favour of all the defendants, but the plaintiffs were bound to join all the defendants as respondents in a second appeal (1)

What is a common ground must be determined in each case upon the nature of the decree given, and the cases cited are given in illustration only of the general principle enacted.(2)

The Calcutta High Court has held,(3) dissenting in this from a Madras decision, subsequently overruled,(4) that the former section did not require that the decree appealed against should proceed exclusively on grounds common to all the defendants, but that it should proceed on any ground common to the defendants

Under this rule, one of several persons who have stood on a common ground may appeal for all. They are not prevented from appealing severally if they wish to do so, but if they allow one of their number to represent them for pressing their appeal, they must accept his representative character as to the incidents also of the appeal, at least so far as the juridical relation between the parties are concerned. The appeal opens up the whole case, though made by but one of the joint parties in the Court below. But the case being thus opened up, it is opened up for the respondent as well as for the appellant, and under the former sect 561 (now O XLII r 22) the respondent may press any objection against the decree which he could have urged in an independent appeal. Where a decree of the Court of the first instance is partly in favour of two joint plaintiffs, and one plaintiff appeals, the Appellate Court may reject the whole claim on the cross objection of the defendant,(5) the decree having been passed against the defendants, it was open to any one of them to appeal against it if the ground of appeal was common to all the defendants (6). But where there are several respondents before the Court of first appeal, though one of them may represent his fellows in a further appeal, he cannot represent a person who was not his

co-respondent and against whom therefore no decree could have been made on a point common to the two, or on any point at all (1)

It was held that the former section applied only to appeals by parties arrayed on the same side of a litigation in the original Court and against whom judgment on a common ground had been passed, and only some of them appeal from such judgment on behalf of themselves and others who do not join in the appeal. It did not relate to cases in which a party (be he a plaintiff or a defendant in the original Court) who has been unsuccessful only to a certain extent of the subject matter of the litigation in appeal from so much of the decree as has been passed against him, brings a total appeal.

in a certain share to set aside the sale of that share, having been dismissed, one the other parties did not appeal. As they both had joined in one suit, but only one had appealed, the decree of the Appellate Court would have been for the benefit of both, and the whole sale would have been set aside. Their bringing separate suits instead of joining in one suit ought not to make any difference in that respect (3)

It was held that where a respondent failed to give the notice required by sect 561 of the former Code (see r 22 of this Order) it was not open to the Appellate Court to grant any relief to that respondent in a case where the granting of such relief was not necessarily incidental to the relief granted to the party who had appealed (4). But see now in this connection r 33 of this Order, which enacts part of O 58, r 4 of the English Rules.

co respondent and against whom therefore no decree could have been made on a point common to the two, or on any point at all (1)

It was held that the former section applied only to appeals by parties arrived on the same side of a litigation in the original Court and against whom judgment on a common ground had been passed, and only some of them appeal from such judgment on behalf of themselves and others who do not join in the appeal. It did not relate to cases in which a party (be he a plaintiff or a defendant in the original Court) who has been unsuccessful only to a certain extent of the subject matter of the litigation in appeal from so much of the decree as has been passed against him happens to value the appeal as if it related to the whole subject matter of the litigation or to pay Court fees on such amount (2). Where two suits brought by two different parties claiming different interests in a certain share to set aside the sale of that share having been dismissed one of the plaintiffs appealed and the sale was set aside, it was held that the decision must be considered as setting the sale aside as to the whole of that share, although the other parties did not appeal. If they both had joined in one suit but only one had appealed the decree of the Appellate Court would have been for the benefit of both, and the whole sale would have been set aside. Their bringing separate suits instead of joining in one suit ought not to make any difference in that respect (3).

(3) No order for stay of execution shall be made under sub-rule (1) or sub-rule (2) unless the Court making it is satisfied—

- (a) that substantial loss may result to the party applying for stay of execution unless the order is made,
- (b) that the application has been made without unreasonable delay; and
- (c) that security has been given by the applicant for the due performance of such decree or order as may ultimately be binding upon him.

(4) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-rule (3), the Court may make an ex parte order for stay of execution pending the hearing of the application.

“Stay of execution”—This rule, which refers to applications by parties only (1) assumes that there is something to stay and therefore does not apply where the decree has been in fact executed (2) To execute a judgment or order is to carry it into effect or enforce it. When there still remains something substantial to be done under a decree, before it can become thoroughly effectual that decree has to be “executed” within the meaning of this rule (3) So a decree directing the issue of a grant of probate to the propounder of a will is one that is capable of execution, and stay of execution of such decree can be granted under it (4) It was held that sect. 283 of the former Code did not constitute an exception to the procedure laid down by sect. 545, now replaced by this rule (5)

The principle upon which all stay is granted for the preservation of property pending litigation is that the successful party in the litigation—that is, the ultimately successful party—is to reap the fruits of that litigation and not to obtain merely a barren success (6) In cases where a stay of execution or an injunction is granted on an ex parte application, liberty to apply to the Judge to vary or set aside the order must be implied if not expressed (7) And a Court which has jurisdiction to pass an order has equally jurisdiction to pass any subsequent order in any matter flowing from and naturally and necessarily arising out of the first order (8) The ruling that if property is sold before an order staying execution is communicated, the sale is in such case not void (9) has been dissented from (1) the order of stay taking effect when it is made and not when it is communicated. It has been said that an applicant who has asked for stay of execution should on the ground of its being an indulgence be made to pay costs even if successful (2). But this has been dissented from (3) and there is certainly strong support in reason for the view that when the law allows an appeal and allows an appellant upon proper cause being shown to ask for and obtain an order for stay it cannot be said that what is asked for is merely an indulgence.

By Court of first instance—The rule assumes that the decree is appealable and not final (4). If an appeal lies but has not been filed the first Court but no other (5) may stay execution upon an application made before the expiry of the period of appeal though as the rule states the successful party is not prohibited from executing his decree simply on the ground that the period for appealing has not expired (6). The Court which dismisses a suit becomes functus officio save that it may stay execution of its own decree or order for costs (7). After appeal is filed the Appellate Court, as the Court which has seizure of the suit may stay execution (8). A Civil Court cannot stay execution in cases in which an appeal has been made to the Privy Council against a decree of the High Court (9).

"Sufficient cause"—The application should be supported by an affidavit verifying the facts alleged and these facts should show sufficient cause for a stay (10). What constitutes sufficient cause must depend upon the facts of the particular case (11). In this connection the proviso to the rule must be referred to. The Court is given a discretion in the matter and may refuse the application where there has been such delay as disentitles the party to any consideration from the Court (12). And see post. The provisions of this rule as regards the exhibition of sufficient cause apply equally to decrees for immovable as for moveable property (13).

"Substantial loss"—As appears from the use of the word shall this Notice—Though there was no express provision as to notice under the last Code it was the practice to give notice to the decree holder before disposing finally of an application for stay of execution (3) And this will probably be so in the generality of cases now, though not statutorily required, unless the case falls within the fourth clause

Security—The taking of security is compulsory (4) The nature and extent of the liability depends on the words of the security bond given to the Court (5) The rule refers to the ultimate order, and, therefore, the obligation extends to the final decree passed after remand by the High Court in second appeal (6) The amount, of course, is determinable by the special circumstances When proceedings are ordered to be stayed on giving security, the judgment debtor must be allowed reasonable opportunity to show that the security offered is sufficient (7) This clause does not contemplate a decree or order in a separate proceeding to be instituted in the future (8) The relationship between a decree holder and judgment debtor who has executed a security bond mortgaging property is not such as to be governed by sect 67 of the Transfer of Property Act, and a suit is not necessary (9) In the case of third parties, the Bombay High Court has held (10) that payment by a surety may be enforced by summary process in execution The Calcutta High Court has considered a suit necessary (11) The former view has now been adopted in sect 145, ante In the under mentioned case the Court directed that execution should be first taken against the judgment debtor and then the surety (12) When property is deposited in Court in lieu of security for the purpose of staying a sale and the order directing the sale is confirmed on appeal, neither the depositor nor judgment debtor can claim to have the deposit restored which is then held for the decree holder (13) As to appeal see next paragraph The Court may, on the bond ceasing to have effect, direct that it be cancelled and returned. For the power to take security involves the other (1). But a Subordinate Court has no jurisdiction to release a security taken under the directions of the High Court (2). Where by order of an Appellate Court a security bond was executed by the judgment debtor for stay of execution of a decree pending the decision of an appeal under sect 545 of the last Code (now represented by this rule) and after the disposal of the appeal the decree holder applied for sale of the property under the subsisting attachment, it was held that the sale could be carried out in execution proceedings consequent on the attachment (3). A security bond under this rule pledging immovable property exceeding Rs 100 in value requires registration (4).

Stay by Appellate Court—An appeal must be pending. A Court has no power after the passing of a final unappealable decree and before the granting of an application for review of judgment to order a stay of execution of the decree (5). In the decision cited (6) it was held that where an incidental decree under sect 241 (now 47) is under appeal the Court may stay execution of the substantive or original decree in the suit pending the hearing of the appeal though such original decree is itself not under appeal. See now r 8 post. The manner in which an Appellate Court effects a stay is either on appeal from an order of the Court of first instance refusing a stay for such an order when made by a High Court is a judgment under the Letters Patent (7) and when made by other Courts is one falling within sect 244 (now sect 47) ante (8) provided that the Court against which the appeal is made is the Court executing the decree within the meaning of that section, (9) or after an appeal has been filed an original application may be made direct to the Appellate Court (10). But the Appellate Court must have acquired seizin either of the original suit or of the execution proceedings. It was therefore held that the High Court was not competent to stay proceedings in execution of a decree of a Subordinate Court merely by reason of an appeal having been preferred against an order of refusal to set aside the decree under sect 108 of the former Code corresponding with O IX r 13 of this Code (11). A Superior Court has no power to direct a Subordinate Court to stay execution in a case which is not before it (12). When an Appellate Court reverses a decree in favour of a plaintiff, it should not stay execution of its own decree, for in such case a plaintiff having lost his decree is in no better position until his special appeal is decided than a plaintiff before judgment (1) When an Appellate Court refuses an application for stay, this does not prevent an application under sect 546 (now r 6), should an order for execution be obtained (2)

The Court has inherent powers of stay beyond those given by statute. There is an inherent power in the Court to stay under proper circumstances the drawing up of its own order or to suspend their operation, if the necessities of justice so require, (3) or to stay proceedings in the Lower Court—such power being auxiliary to that of the Appellate Court to reverse the order of the Inferior Court (4) And when an appeal is pending against a preliminary order directing an account, the Court having seizure of the appeal can apart from the question whether the case falls within the Code, make an order staying the carrying out of such order pending the hearing of the appeal (5)

Appeal—An order refusing stay of execution made by a Court which is not executing the decree is not appealable (6)

6 (1) Where an order is made for the execution of a decree from which an appeal is pending, the Court which passed the decree shall, on sufficient cause being shown by the appellant, require security to be taken for the restitution of any property which may be or has been taken in execution of the decree or for the payment of the value of such property and for the due performance of the decree or order of the Appellate Court, or the Appellate Court may for like cause direct the Court which passed the decree to take such security.

Security for restitution—No action can be taken unless an appeal is pending (1) Under sect 36, Act XXIII of 1861, the Court was given a discretion (2) Under the present rule, as under the last Code, the Court must demand security on sufficient cause being shown by the appellant In the case of money decrees the party appealing may obtain stay of execution of the decree, so far as it directs payment, on his lodging the amount in Court, unless the other party gives security for the repayment of the money in the event of the decree being reversed, in which case stay should not be granted (3) Where the application is made before execution has been taken out sufficient cause must be shown—that is, probable cause—of the judgment-debtor's inability to recover the property if the decree be reversed (4) The former section spoke of property which "may be taken in execution," and a question therefore arose whether security may be taken, where the decree has been already executed at the date of the application See cases cited (5) The case has now been met by the introduction of the words "or has been" The security bond should be made applicable to the ultimate decision which may be passed in the suit (6) An order requiring security is appealable (7) As regards the enforcement of the security if it be personal to the parties to the suit there is no difficulty in proceeding to realize any amount that may be due in execution of the decree to which they were parties A difficulty, however, has arisen where the security is given by a third party for either the appellant or respondent (8) The Calcutta High Court has held that a bond given by a third party must be enforced by separate suit, and not in execution of the decree for the due performance of which it was given (9) The Bombay High Court has held that summary process in execution is available (10) See however now sect 145

Stay of sale—The former section referred to execution of a decree "for money," and a decree for arrears of rent was held to be such (11) These words have now been omitted The former section did not expressly state to what Court the application should be made It was a point of doubt whether the Appellate Court had jurisdiction (12) The amendment makes it

- Exercise of powers in appeal from order made in execution of decree*

Appeal from orders in execution.—This rule, which is new, has been added to meet particularly the case where the litigant does not quarrel with the decree but appeals from an order passed in execution of that decree. It adopts, as regards stay of execution, the decision noted, (2) in which it was held that an Appellate Court had power to stay execution when an appeal from an order in execution proceedings was pending before that Court. See note to r 5, ante 'Stay by Appellate Court'

Procedure on admission of appeal

- 9 (1) Where a memorandum of appeal is admitted, the Appellate Court or the proper officer of that Court shall endorse thereon the date of presentation, and shall register the appeal in a book to be kept for the purpose

Register of Appeals

(2) Such book shall be called the Register of Appeals

Registration.—The registration of an appeal is a proceeding of a purely ministerial character (3). An appellant has no right to withdraw an appeal which has been regularly registered without the permission of the Court, and the leave of the Court is in every case necessary after an appeal has been regularly registered. As a general rule of practice the respondent should be served with due notice of the application for leave when it is made after the notice of the day fixed for hearing has been issued. In every instance the appellant will be liable to pay to the respondent his costs occasioned by the appeal (4). When the Lower Appeal Court rejects an appeal—holding that no appeal lies, on the ground that the first Court's judgment was final under sect 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act—the High Court, on second appeal, when prima facie the suit is not one under sect. 153 of the Tenancy Act, can direct that the appeal in the Court below be duly registered under this rule (1)

10 (1) The Appellate Court may in its discretion, either before the respondent is called upon to appear and answer or afterwards on the application of the respondent, demand from the appellant security for the costs of the appeal, or of the original suit, or of both :

Where appellant resides out of British India, cases in which the appellant is residing out of British India, and is not possessed of any sufficient immoveable property within British India other than the property (if any) to which the appeal relates.

(2) Where such security is not furnished within such time as the Court orders, the Court shall reject the appeal.

Object of rule.—This rule was never intended by the Legislature to derogate from the right of appeal given by the law to every person who is defeated in a suit in the Court of first instance (2) Its object is to secure the respondent in an appeal from the risk of having to incur further costs which he might never succeed in recovering from the appellant (3) The fourth paragraph of the former section, which was one of procedure only, (4) and dealt with summary proceedings in execution against the surety has been omitted The matter is covered by section 145, ante (5)

"The Appellate Court"—This rule applies, it has been held, only to appeals preferred to the High Court from subordinate Courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction, and not to appeals preferred to the High Court under clause 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of one of its own Judges, (6) and does not apply to appeals from the orders of a Judge sitting as a commissioner of the Insolvent Court, (7) the right of appeal in such cases being given by sect 73 of the Insolvent Act (11 & 12 Vict c 21) It is applicable to an appeal from an order under sect 211 (now sect 47) (8)

[s. 549, paras. one to three.]

"In its discretion"—Under the first paragraph the Court has absolute discretion in all cases not coming under the second paragraph in making or refusing an order for security for costs. Under the second paragraph, which is the proviso to the first, the Court is given no discretion in the matter. In cases falling within that proviso the Court has to follow the mandate of the statute and make an order for security for costs. An order for security for costs having been made under either the first paragraph or the second, it is by the third paragraph of the rule enacted that if such security be not furnished within such time as the Court orders the Court shall reject the appeal. There again the Court is given no discretion in the matter (1). But the Bombay High Court has recently held that under sect 129 it is not bound to demand such security under the second paragraph, since the provisions of the Bombay High Court Rules are inconsistent with this (2). In this as in other cases the discretion must be properly exercised. And this is not so when no opportunity has been given to show cause against the order (3). The rule is somewhat general in its terms, and it is very desirable that in applying it, the Court should proceed in the exercise of its discretion on some definite general principles, otherwise litigants will be encouraged to make applications, in the great majority of cases (4). Mere poverty is no ground for requiring an appellant to give security for the costs of the appeal (5). But where something more than mere poverty is alleged as where it has been found that the suit is a mere speculation security may be called for (6). If the appellant is unable to pay the costs ordered there is nothing vexatious in his not obeying the order, it is his misfortune and not his fault. But where the conduct of the party complained of, in not paying the costs ordered to be paid, is vexatious—that is, such as indicates a wilful determination on his part not to obey the order of the Court and there is a vexatious determination not to pay costs ordered to be paid—there is good ground for applying for security for costs (7). Where the parties have agreed that there should be security for costs, security should be demanded (8). The Madras High Court has held that the former section was applicable to appeals in form 1

pauperis, though very special grounds must be shown for taking security (1) The Calcutta High Court has held otherwise (2)

"On the application."—Such an application must be made promptly. The rule has always been that applications for security for costs must be made promptly, not only on the ground that the respondent should apply for security for costs before he incurs them, but on the ground that it is unreasonable that security should not be applied for till the applicant has incurred the costs of the appeal, whether they have been paid by himself or by his solicitors (3). Thus when an application for security for costs already incurred and for estimated costs was made by the respondent, when the appellant had already incurred all the costs of preparing the paper book and the appeal was actually on the board, the application was dismissed with costs (4). It is a wholesome rule of practice that no order affecting a party should be made without notice to him calling upon him to show cause why the order should not be made (5). The practice is that the respondent obtains a rule nisi on an affidavit, then the appellant shows cause and then the respondent replies (6).

"Of the respondent."—The Appellate Court has no power of its own motion to dismiss an appeal for not furnishing security (when no application has been made for security for costs by the respondent) because the appellant is guilty of no default, not having been called upon by the respondent or the Court to furnish security for costs or of laches, in not voluntarily offering security (7).

"From the appellant."—An application that the respondent should give security was of course refused (8).

"Or of the original suit."—This expression must refer primarily to the original suit in which the decree was passed, in execution of which the order appealed against was passed. It may also refer to the costs recited in the order in the execution proceedings, which are proceedings in the suit. Thus the Court has power to require an appellant from an order under sect. 214 (now sect. 47), to give security for the costs of the appeal and of the original suit (9). As regards the costs of original hearing, the applicant must make out either that the appellants are residing out of the jurisdiction or that the conduct of the party complained of, in not paying the costs ordered to be paid is vexatious (1)

Form of order—An order for security for costs should follow the words of the rule, and should not specify the particular amount in rupees for which security should be given. It would be a good order under the rule if it directed the appellant to furnish the security within a time to be stated 'for the costs of the appeal' or 'for the costs of the original suit' or "for the costs of the appeal and of the original suit". To hold that the order must specify the amount in rupees of costs for which security should be given would either be to frustrate the intention of the Legislature in framing the section or to make the order a purely speculative order. The object of the rule is that the respondent at the earliest moment which suits him should take the advantage of the rule and at that time it would be impossible for the respondent the appellant or the Court to say what might be the costs of the appeal. The last paragraph of the former section was said to point to the security being for an indefinite and not for a definite amount. An order specifying the amount would not be a bad order but the better practice is that the amount should not be specified in the order (2)

"Within such time"—The application to the Court to enlarge the time for giving security may be made either before or after the expiration of the time within which the security has been ordered to be furnished and the Court may thereupon enlarge the time according to any necessity which may arise where it is just and proper that it should do so. If ultimately the order is not complied with and the security is not furnished the appeal may be rejected (3). It cannot be laid down as a hard and fast rule that the Court can in no case after the time for giving security is passed allow the appellant further time for giving security (4). This principle has now been adopted in sect 148 ante. Though the Court may extend the time for furnishing the security demanded after the time allowed by the order has elapsed it will not do so unless on good grounds (5).

"Shall reject."—The Code empowers the Appellate Court to demand notice to show cause is not tantamount to a demand. It simply informs

A Court is not bound by the Code to issue such a notice, though it would generally be improper to make an order for security without affording the appellant the opportunity of contesting it. Where such notice is given the appellant is not bound to appear. He may allow the application to be decided in his absence. If he does not appear and the order is not made in his presence, he must have due notice of it to constitute a demand. The order directing the appellant to furnish security must be served either on him or on his vakil. It would be unreasonable to hold that he was in contempt or disobedience of an order which had not been communicated to him (1). Conflicting opinions have been expressed upon the question whether when the appellant has not given security for costs, the respondent should apply specially to have the appeal rejected or whether it is sufficient for him to object at the hearing of the appeal for non-compliance with the order (2). An appeal, though rejected, may, on sufficient grounds, be restored (3). No appeal is given from an order for security for costs. It has been held therefore, that it could not have been intended that the order for security which was unappealable might be questioned by an appeal from the act of the Court compulsorily done under the rule on security not being given is ordered. An order, therefore, rejecting an appeal under this rule is not a decree and is not appealable in such (4) nor is an order (5).

and a judgment and decree should be drawn up in the usual manner. It has been held that in dismissing an appeal under this rule a District Judge is not relieved from the necessity of writing a judgment, however short showing the reasons therefor (1). But it is not to draw up decrees under this rule (2)

And the Allahabad High Court has held that it is not obligatory upon the lower Appellate Court to write a judgment in such cases (3). But a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court has recently held that a lower Appellate Court must write its judgment (as provided by Bombay Civil Circular 51), when it dismisses an appeal under this rule (4). The order of dismissal under this rule is a decree and not merely a refusal to entertain the appeal, and so far as it is a final adjudication there is no distinction between an appeal which is dismissed under this rule and an appeal dismissed after full hearing (5). Where an appeal is dismissed under this rule, the effect of the dismissal is to affirm the decree appealed against, which becomes merged in the decree of dismissal of the Appellate Court. When, therefore, an appeal has been dismissed under this rule, the Court which made the decree appealed against has no jurisdiction to review its judgment or decree (6).

(2) The Court shall then, if it does not dismiss the appeal at once, hear the respondent against the appeal, and in such case the appellant shall be entitled to reply.

Hearing—The rule says “on the day fixed,” but the hearing of the appeal before the day fixed, if the pleaders of both parties are present and argue the case, is not such a defect in procedure as renders interference in special appeal necessary (1) If it appears that the rules of Court relating to appeals have not been complied with, and no adequate excuse is offered, the appeal may be dismissed (2)

6] 17. (1) Where on the day fixed, or on any other day to which the hearing may be adjourned, the appellant does not appear when the appeal is called on for hearing, the Court may make an order that the appeal be dismissed

(2) Where the appellant appears and the respondent does not appear, the appeal shall be heard ex parte

“Where on the day fixed,” etc.—A party seeking to put in motion the stringent provisions of this rule is bound to show very distinctly that the procedure under it has been strictly complied with, and that the appellant did not make his appearance on the day to which the case was adjourned. When he is unable to show that, or that the appellant below had any notice that his appeal was to have been heard on the day on which the Judge disposed of it the appeal cannot be dismissed under this rule (3) Where a Lower Appellate Court, after eleven months’ delay and without fixing any time for disposing of an appeal, dismissed it for default, the High Court set aside the order and remanded the case (4) If an appeal is called on without any day having been fixed for hearing and the appellant is absent, his absence is not a default which renders his appeal liable to be dismissed (5) It should appear on the record that a day had been fixed for the hearing of the appeal, and that thereupon the default had followed (6) But if an appeal is taken up before the appointed day and is allowed to proceed to a hearing in the presence of the pleaders of the parties and is argued by them, there is no defect in the procedure (7)

“Appear”—The former section (556) ran “does not attend in person or by his pleader” But the word “attend” was held to be practically synonymous with “appear” (8) The present wording therefore effects no alteration in the

"Appearance" has several meanings, and these must be understood in reference to the particular subject to which it relates, and the purpose or end to be answered by the appearance has an important bearing in determining what is sufficient to constitute an appearance in a particular case. A Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court (2) has recently ruled that an application by counsel or pleader who is instructed only to apply for an adjournment, which is refused is not an "appearance," and that when in such circumstance an appeal is dismissed the dismissal is one for default under this rule entitling the appellant to apply for re-admission under r 19. The decisions are not altogether uniform but the balance of authority in the Bombay (3) and Allahabad (4) High Courts is in favour of the same view, which has also been taken by the Punjab Chief Court (5). Where, however, a pleader for the appellant appeared and asked for an adjournment but did not withdraw from the case, merely urging that the records were in possession of his leader who was absent and that he could not argue the appeal, but the application for adjournment was not granted it was held by the Madras High Court that it was open to the Court to refuse the adjournment but that if it did so it was bound to write a judgment and dispose of the appeal, and could not dismiss it for default (6). But the Madras High Court has recently held that where the pleader was instructed only to apply for an adjournment and was not duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit, nor accompanied by any one able to answer such questions there was no appearance by the defendant (7). When the appellant and his pleaders were present when the appeal was called on for hearing and one of the pleaders addressed the Court, but soon after the commencement of his argument went to another Court and did not return and the other pleader refused to address the Court the appeal it was held should be dismissed but not for default (8). If the appellant in a case remanded to the Lower Appellate Court does not put in an appearance and takes no steps to produce evidence the Lower Appellate Court may dismiss the appeal for default (9). Where there were two appel-

"Be dismissed"—The Court in the absence of the appellant on the day fixed for hearing should dismiss the appeal and not reverse the judgment of the lower Court (2) If a Judge instead of dismissing the appeal for non appearance of the appellant in person or by pleader, goes into the merits of the case and gives judgment against the appellant the appeal must be considered as dismissed for default of the appellant in appearing, and an application for re admission and re hearing of the appeal cannot be treated as one for review. It is improper to consider or decide upon the merits of a case when the Judge has been passed cannot apply for re-hearing under this rule (1) In such cases the remedy lies under r 21

"To the Appellate Court."—The application must be made to the Court dismissing the appeal (2) If an appeal is referred by a District Judge to an Assistant Judge for trial under sect 17 of the Bombay Civil Courts Act (Act XIV of 1869), and the Assistant Judge dismisses the appeal for default, the application for re-admission of the appeal should be made to him and not to the District Judge and his order refusing to re-admit the appeal is not subject to reversal or review by the District Judge (3) As to limitation in case of such an application, see case cited (4)

"Prevented"—This and the kindred provision in O 1X r 13 mean that the application may be based upon any ground which would be a just and proper one for granting the application, and not that the application can be based upon one ground only, viz that the applicant was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing. The affirmative provisions of the Code that a plaintiff or appellant may prove that he was "prevented by sufficient cause" from appearing or attending when his suit or appeal was called on and dismissed do not imply the negative namely, that an application for restoration cannot be granted unless "sufficient cause (in this sense) is shown" (5) It has been recently held that a Court has power to restore an appeal dismissed for default even where the appellant is not able to prove that he was prevented by a sufficient cause from appearing and that the Court is not bound to restore an appeal in every case where the non-appearance is due to the pleader's negligence but may in its discretion leave him to his remedy against the pleader by an action for damages (6) The Court is bound to see whether the reasons set forth in the application for the re-admission of the appeal are satisfactory or not. Thus, where the Lower Appellate Court refused an application for re-admission merely because the appellant had not conformed to a rule which he had passed that two pleaders should be engaged in every appeal, the High Court sent back the case to the Judge to consider whether a good ground had been shown for the re-admission of the appeal (7) The reasons for rejecting the application should be stated (8) When an appeal was transferred from the file of one Court to another, no notice of the transfer having been given to the appellant by the pleaders in the case and the appeal was dismissed in his absence, held that sufficient ground for his absence had been made out (9) What however is "sufficient cause" must be decided in each case according to its own peculiar circumstances

"From appearing"—Whether the application is made for restoration under this rule or O 1X r 13 the same principle will apply. In both cases the question is whether an appearance by a counsel or pleader instructed to apply only for an adjournment is an "appearance" within the meaning of the Code, and whether in such a case the suit or appeal can be dismissed for default. The first question has been answered in the negative and the second in the affirmative (1). When an appeal is dismissed under such circumstances the order of dismissal is for default, and the appellant is entitled to apply for re-admission of the appeal under this rule (2). Where an appeal is dismissed by a Divisional Bench of the High Court, for default in depositing the estimated costs of preparation of the paper book, such a dismissal can be set aside by review. Such a case is not one in which default was made in appearing at the hearing of the case if the record shows that the pleaders on both sides were in attendance and heard. Under the Code there are only two methods known to the law by which a judgment and decree of a Divisional Bench of the High Court can be set aside in India. These two methods are described in these provisions and those relating to review. Where it appears from the record that pleaders on both sides were in attendance and heard there has been no default in appearing at the hearing of the case, and therefore this rule will not apply (3).

Appeal.—The Code allows an appeal from an order refusing to grant an application under this rule for the restoration of an appeal. But it does not provide for an appeal from an order granting such an application (4). When, however, the order dismissing an appeal is not one which can properly be made under r 17 there is no appeal from an order refusing to re-admit the appeal under this rule and the remedy in such a case is by revision. Thus in a case when the appeal came on for hearing the appellant himself and two pleaders on his behalf were present in the Lower Appellate Court, one of the pleaders opened the case but in a short time was called away to attend to a case before another Court and the Lower Appellate Court waiting some little time for the pleader to return called upon the other pleader and the appellant to support the appeal and when each of them declared his inability to do so dismissed the appeal for the default of prosecution. The appellant then applied for the restoration of the appeal which was refused on the ground that no sufficient cause was shown for the restoration. The appellant appealed to the High Court under this rule. It was dismissed on the ground that the appeal in the Lower Appellate Court was not dismissed for default but the appellant was allowed to file an application for revision (5). When an application for restoration any person who was a party to the suit in the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, but who has not been made a party to the appeal, is interested in the result of the appeal, the Court may adjourn the hearing to a future day to be fixed by the Court and direct that such person be made a respondent

Adding respondent—The power of the Court to act under this rule is only limited in two respects, first, the person whom the Court may add must have been a party to the suit, and secondly, he must be a person interested in the result of the appeal. There is no period of limitation specified in the Limitation Act, for the action of the Court in that matter (2). The party added must be interested in the result of the appeal. Whether this be so must be determined in each case on its facts (3). In a suit for contribution the first Court gave a decree against one of the defendants and dismissed it against the other. On appeal by the defendant against whom the decree was passed, the lower appeal Court having at the hearing of the appeal, found that the defendants against whom the suit was dismissed were not made parties to the appeal, though interested in the result of the appeal directed that they should be made parties, and they entered appearance in accordance with the order made. Held that there was nothing wrong in the lower appeal Courts making them respondents and passing a decree against them (4). An Appellate Court is competent to make a person a respondent who in the original suit was arrayed on the same side with the appellant (5). In a suit for contribution where there was a decree against defendants Nos 1 and 3 separately, and the suit was dismissed against defendant No 2 on appeal by defendant No 1 there being no appeal by the plaintiff defendant No 2 might, it was held, be made a respondent (1) The Allahabad High Court has held that the provisions of the former section did not apply to second appeals, and that a second Appellate Court could not add a party as a respondent unless that party was a party to the appeal below, and thus notwithstanding that he was a party to the suit in the Court of first instance, (2) but the opposite view has been held by the Madras High Court, and according to the ruling of that High Court, it is competent for the second Appellate Court to add parties who were defendants in the Court of first instance, though not joined as respondents in the Lower Appellate Court (3) This rule applies only to cases where at the hearing of the appeal the Court is satisfied that a person who was a party to the suit in the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, but who has not been made a party to the appeal is interested in the result of the appeal (4) prevented by sufficient cause from appearing when the appeal was called on for hearing, the Court shall re-hear the appeal on such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit to impose upon him.

Rehearing of appeal — After an appeal is filed the power to set aside the original decree on an application under sect 108 (now O IX r 13) is vested in the Appellate Court This power is distinct from the power to set aside an ex parte appellate decree conferred by the present rule which only enables the Court to direct the appeal from the original decree to be reheard thus temporarily restoring the original decree (5) No appeal lies to the High Court under sect 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act from an order refusing to hear an application under this rule to have an appeal from a decree in a rent suit valued less than Rs 100 reheard in the presence of the respondent (6) An application to rehear the appeal is an application in the suit (7)

he could have taken by way of appeal, provided he has filed such objection in the Appellate Court within one month from the date of service on him or his pleader of notice of the day fixed for hearing the appeal, or within such further time as the Appellate Court may see fit to allow.

(2) Such cross-objection shall be in the form of a memorandum, and the provisions of rule 1, so far as they relate to the form and contents of the memorandum of appeal, shall apply thereto.

(3) Unless the respondent files with the objection a written acknowledgment from the party who may be affected by such objection or his pleader of having received a copy thereof, the Appellate Court shall cause a copy to be served, as soon as may be after the filing of the objection, on such party or his pleader at the expense of the respondent.

(4) Where, in any case in which any respondent has under this rule filed a memorandum of objection, the original appeal is withdrawn or is dismissed for default, the objection so filed may nevertheless be heard and determined after such notice to the other parties as the Court thinks fit

(5) The provisions relating to pauper appeals shall, so far as they can be made applicable, apply to an objection under this rule.

Scope of rule—In this rule two classes of cases have been referred to under it a respondent may, firstly, support the decree of the Court of first instance upon grounds which may have been decided against him by that Court, and if a part of the decree is adverse to him he has the right to object at the hearing of the appeal to that part of the decree without filing a separate appeal. These two classes of cases are not of an analogous character. Cross-objections are in the nature of an appeal, a remedy which a respondent has against a decree which is partly unfavourable to him (1) A respondent, when the decree is against him, cannot (unless he has filed a cross appeal) be heard except to support the decree, and can only alter it by means of a cross appeal (2) A party may be satisfied with the decree of the Lower Court, and may be willing to allow it to stand unimpeached if his opponent does not think it necessary to appeal, but he may not be willing to have the decree modified or altered upon appeal in favour of his opponent, without having the whole decree set right. Again suppose a defendant sets up two defences to a claim brought against him, and the Lower Court determines in his favour as to one of them and against him as to the other the plaintiff's claim would be dismissed. The Lower Court might be wrong as to both defences, and ought to have decided in the defendant's favour the defence which was decided against him, and vice versa. If the plaintiff were to appeal and to reverse the decision of the Lower Court upon the defence decreed in the defendant's favour it would be unjust not to allow the defendant, if he could, to show that the Lower Court was wrong in point of law in determining the other defence against him, for he might thereby be able to show that the Lower Court was substantially right in dismissing the plaintiff's suit, though wrong as to the defence which barred it (1). He may support the decree on the ground decided against him. This reason applies to special appeals with as much force as to appeals held that the order of a Lower Court may be reversed by the respondent in that Court and a decree passed in appeal within the meaning of sect 581 of the last Code, whether it dealt with the grounds of appeal urged by the appellant or the objections taken by the respondent under sect 561 (3). It was also held that sect 647 of the last Code made applicable to revision petitions under sect 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Court Act, the procedure relating to appeals and consequently a memorandum of objections would lie in such revision petitions (4).

Decree entirely in favour of respondent.—Where a decree is entirely in favour of a respondent it is not necessary for him to file a notice of objection to the decision on any issue found against him. He can support the decree on the ground that that issue ought to have been decided in his favour. The Appellate Court ought to decide that issue or show in its judgment a reason for not doing so (5). And see ante.

"Decided against him"—If a point has not been decided in favour of the respondent, it must for the purposes of the rule be taken to have been decided against him within its meaning. It is not necessary to entitle a respondent to support a decree upon a particular ground that that ground should have been in express terms decided against him (6). Where a claim to set off was asserted in the respondent's (defendant's) written statement but no issue on the point was raised, and no pronouncement on it was made by the first Court and it was not made the subject of any cross objection nor was it urged before the Appellate Court in argument, the former decision was held to be no bar to the Appellate Gudsithar Prasad* 2 A 601 604 (1860) the appellant to the High Court had his appeal in the Lower Court and there was no objection which respondents could have taken by way of appeal to this Court against the decree of the Lower Appellate Court. See as to this case Kamal v. Kamal 5 B 365, 371 (1864).

Court's jurisdiction to deal with the point, because the first Court did not decide the point adversely to the respondent. It did not deal with it, and so the case was held to fall within the operation of sect 506 of the former Code (1)

Decree unfavourable to respondent.—This rule gives the respondent the power of taking any objection to the decree at the hearing of an appeal which he could have taken by way of appeal, (2) provided he has filed a notice of his objection within the prescribed period. Where there is, as a matter of fact, an appeal to be heard (and the question whether the appeal would, in law, lie or not does not affect the respondent's right in such cases), at such hearing the respondent is entitled to have his objections to the decree heard or determined (3). The law gives a defendant the right to file a cross objection. Of this right he cannot be deprived merely because only one of two plaintiffs appealed instead of both (4). But the right of taking objections exists only in those cases in which the party proposing to file them might have appealed and did not. Thus where, immediately upon the dismissal of his appeal, the plaintiff filed objections in the defendant's appeal setting up the very grounds upon which in his own appeal he had asked for relief and been refused it was held that such objections could not be entertained (5). Where a decree is in favour of the respondent the Appellate Court should not accept the facts found by the first Court as incontestably proved, merely because no objection to the decree was filed by the respondent under this rule. The Appellate Court should deal with the evidence in the case and find on it whether the facts found by the first Court were proved or not (6). The consequence of the grant of a certificate under sect 48 of the City of Bombay Improvement Act (Bomb Act IV of 1898) is that there shall be an appeal to the High Court from the award or any part of the award of the Special Collector under the Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894) and this must mean that there shall be a right of appeal, or to use the language of the Code that an appeal will lie to the High Court, and it follows that the respondent will be entitled to object in manner provided by this rule (7). It has been held that where a respondent to an appeal failed to give the notice required it was not open to the Appellate Court to grant any relief to that respondent in a case where the granting of such relief was not necessarily incidental

Gajadhar Prasad (1880), 2 A. 651, 654, as it had no bearing on this case. In the case in 2 A. 651 both parties appealed from the decree of the first Court, and both the appeals were dismissed by the Lower Appellate Court. The plaintiff then appealed to the High Court whereupon the defendant wanted to file objections to the decree of the Lower Appellate Court dismissing his appeal, and it was held that such objection could not be entertained (at p. 654).

to the relief granted to a party who had appealed, (1) but that the rule in no way prevented an Appellate Court from upholding the decree of the Lower Court on any ground which in law warranted such upholding, even though that ground may not have been referred to, or disallowed in the Lower Court (2) The Appellate Court ought not, it was held, to reverse the decision of the Lower Court where the respondent has made no objection to it. Thus a plaintiff claimed a certain sum and was awarded a less sum by the first Court. He then appealed on the ground that he should have been awarded the full amount but the defendant did not object to the decree awarding the lesser amount. The Appellate Court could not, it was held, reverse the first Court's decree and dismiss altogether plaintiff's suit (3). When the defendant respondent does not appeal against or object to the amount awarded by the first Court to the plaintiff, it was held not open to the Appellate Court to reduce it (4). The extended powers which have been now given to Appellate Courts by the new r 33 of this Order are, however, to be noted in connection with these and similar cases.

"To the decree"—The decree alone is appealable: there is no appeal from the judgment. If a party desires to have formal effect given to findings in a judgment by the decree so as to allow of his filing objections under this rule, he should apply to have the decree brought into conformity with the judgment (5).

Against whom cross objections may be filed—The question whether the right of a respondent to prefer cross objections is limited to urging them against the appellant or whether one respondent can prefer cross objections against another respondent, has given rise to some discussion. On the one hand, it may be said that the right of urging cross objections on the part of the respondent ought to be limited to urging them as against those of his adversaries in the Court below, who are dissatisfied with the decree of that Court and who have preferred an appeal against the same and that other parties who have not preferred any appeal against the decree of the Court below and against whom no appeal has been preferred ought to be left unaffected by the appeal except so far as it may benefit them under the provisions of O 41 r 4. On the other hand it may be urged that cases may arise in which the appeal of some only of the defendants or of the plaintiffs may open up matters which render it necessary for the ends of justice that the whole case should be gone into and some of the respondents should be allowed the opportunity of urging cross objections against their co-respondents. When this question came up before the Calcutta High Court (1) it was decided that as a general rule the right of a respondent to urge cross-objections should be limited to his urging them against the appellants, and it is only by way of exception to this general rule that one respondent may urge cross objections as against the other respondents, the exception holding good, among other cases, in those in which the appeal of some of the parties opens out questions which cannot be disposed of completely without matters being allowed to be opened up as between co respondents (2) Thus where the Court of first instance decided a suit upon a ground common to all the defendants it was held it was competent for the Appellate Court, on the appeal of only one of the defendants, to modify or set aside in favour of all the defendants the decree of the Lower Court, and the whole case was opened out in appeal, not only as between the plaintiff and the defendant who had appealed, but also as between the plaintiff and other defendants who had been made respondents apparently because they had not joined in the appeal. It was held that the Appellate Court could not do complete justice between all the parties without opening up the whole case, and such an instance was one of the exceptional cases in which a respondent should be allowed to prefer objections as against his co respondents (3) It was also held by the Madras High Court that one respondent can file a memorandum of objections against another respondent (4)

Court fees on cross objections—The objections under this rule have to be made by means of a document which has to be filed within one month after service of notice of the appeal, that is, on a date which is generally long prior to the date of hearing. Is that document chargeable with court fees at the time it is filed? Under sect 4, Court Fees Act, it is not so chargeable unless it is a document of any of the kinds specified in the first or second Schedule annexed to the Act. A memorandum of objections is not a document so specified in those schedules. Such being the case, no fee is leviable on a memorandum of objections until the time of hearing, and it is leviable under the special provision in sect 16 of the Court Fees Act (5). The Court cannot remit the stamp duty in such cases, (6) the proper order is to dismiss the memorandum (with or without costs, at the discretion of the Court) (7).

"Within one month"—This rule allows a respondent to file a memorandum of objections within one month from the date on which notice has been served on him or on his pleader. The right so conferred is an absolute right, and the hearing of the appeal cannot be advanced so as to defeat this provision. An appeal cannot be definitely posted until the Court has ascertained that notice of the appeal has been served on the respondent, and a date should then be fixed not less than one month from the date of service (1). The Court may grant further time. Whether it will do so will depend on the particular facts proved (2). Under this rule the Court has power to receive a memorandum of cross-objections at any time (3).

Withdrawal of appeal (sub rule (4))—Cross objections are in the nature of an appeal, a remedy which a respondent has against a decree partly unfavourable to him, but they were considered to so far differ from a cross appeal that they depended on the hearing of the appeal, and could not be heard if the appeal was not heard. Upon this view a number of questions arose as to the effect of the withdrawal of an appeal before and after the commencement of the hearing, and what constituted a hearing upon the right to have cross objections heard and determined (4). The general result of these decisions may be stated to be that they involved a discussion of the meaning of the term "hearing" that if the appeal was withdrawn before the 'hearing' the respondent could not be heard upon his cross objections dependent as they were on the appeal, but that if the hearing had begun and the Court had thus become seized of the cross objections the respondent could not be deprived of his remedy because the appellant choose to abandon his (5). The matter need not now be further considered. An appellant may of course withdraw his appeal at any time up to its actual decision (6). But now under sub rule (4) in all cases of withdrawal the Court may proceed to determine the cross objections. Where, however, the decree is wholly in favour of the respondent his right to contest any of the conclusions in the first Court judgment is only for the purpose of supporting the decree, and if the appeal is withdrawn that purpose is fully secured because the decree is left standing and the right to dispute the conclusions in the judgment is no longer of any use to him. To withdraw the appeal in such a case cannot, as in the case of cross objections, deprive the respondent of any remedy whatever (1) Sub rule (4) is therefore limited to cross objections. A question also arose as to whether, when an appeal was abandoned, and the respondent could not proceed with his objections to the decree, he could file an appeal, after the expiry of time allowed for appeal by the Limitation Act, under sect 5 of that Act. It was held that the mere fact that an appeal has been withdrawn did not amount to "sufficient cause" within that section. But each case had to be decided upon its own special circumstances. If the Court was satisfied in any case that there had been "sufficient cause for not presenting the appeal within the prescribed time," then it would allow the appeal to be admitted (2). For the reason given such a case is not likely to recur, as there is no necessity to file an appeal if the appeal covers only the ground of the cross objections which can now be determined when the appeal is abandoned.

23 Where the Court from whose decree an appeal is preferred has disposed of the suit upon a preliminary point and the decree is reversed in appeal, the Appellate Court may, if it thinks fit, by order remand the case, and may further direct what issue or issues shall be tried in the case so remanded, and shall send a copy of its judgment and order to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, with directions to readmit the suit under its original number in the register of civil suits, and proceed to determine the suit, and the evidence (if any) recorded during the original trial shall, subject to all just exceptions, be evidence during the trial after remand.

Remand—Where the Lower Court has taken evidence sufficiently to enable the Appellate Court in its view of the case to pronounce judgment, then the latter Court must determine the case whether the Lower Court has or has not fixed the proper issues. In such case it has all the materials necessary to the exercise of its judgment, and if the proper issues have not been fixed it may resettle the issues under r 24. Cases may, however, occur where the Court has not such material.

The first case is where there has been no complete determination of the suit by reason of the Court's erroneous disposal of the case on a "preliminary point." Such an order of remand implies a reversal of the first judgment, (3) and reopens the whole case, (4) and involves a second decision by the Lower Court, that is, the Court which first disposed of the suit and no other (5). This is a complete remand. As already stated a complete remand involves a reversal of the first judgment. Where the first Court disposes of the suit on two grounds only res judicata and limitation and on appeal its decision was upheld only on the first ground and the question of limitation was not gone into in second appeal the High Court reversed the decision and remanded the case to the Lower Appellate Court to decide it on the merits. This was held to leave the whole case open to that Court and before it could reverse the first Court's decree and remand the case for a first decision it was bound to determine whether the first Court's decision on the question of limitation was right or wrong (1). It has been held that it is not a good ground for passing an order of remand under this rule to say that the preliminary issue has been decided by the Court of first instance on a wrong view of the burden of proof unless the Appellate Court finds that such decision was wrong (2).

The next case is when the Lower Court has omitted to try an issue or to determine a question of fact essential to the right decision of the case set up in the first Court and in consequence the evidence is insufficient (rr 25-26). In such a case the decree is not set aside (3). The case is retained undisposed of on the file of the Appellate Court. The Lower Court is directed to take the additional evidence and to try on such evidence the issues remitted. When it has done this it returns the additional evidence with its finding thereon to the Appellate Court which then being placed in a position to determine the appeal passes judgment (4). In this case there is what has been called a partial remand. Where the Court of first instance has considered the whole of the evidence before it and completely disposed of the suit on the merits the Appellate Court must itself finally determine the appeal and cannot remand (5) but if it thinks that the determination of any particular question unnecessary it may make an order under r 25 post (6).

The third case (which is not properly speaking a remand) exists where the Lower Court has determined the whole case and has not omitted to frame or determine any issues but has decided the case on insufficient evidence (rr 27-29). In this case the Appellate Court itself takes the evidence or directs the Lower Court to do so and when such evidence is returned passes judgment in the appeal which as in the former case has meanwhile remained on its file.

An improper order of remand is not necessarily void but only illegal or irregular (7). Under the last Code an order under sect 562 was appealable, (1) and a party might impeach the order of remand on appeal from the final decree (2) Under sect 578 (now s 99), however, no decision should be reversed unless it has affected the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court But jurisdiction in this section is used in its strict sense, and does not mean the legal authority of a Court to do a certain thing, viz to order a remand, and therefore in each case it had to be determined whether the merits had been prejudicially affected (3) Under the present Code, however, an appeal is given from an order under this rule (O XLIII), and under sect 105, if an appeal lies and the party does not appeal, he cannot afterwards dispute the correctness of the order of remand

When a case is remanded the Lower Court should fix a reasonable date for the parties to appear and carry on the suit, (4) and if they do not appear the case should be dismissed (5) If they appear no fresh talatnama is necessary (6) When a case is remanded to a District Judge he should not transfer it to another officer (7) Costs of the Appellate Court can be recovered only when the order of remand provides for them (8) If on the return of the case it appears that the remand order has not been carried out, the Court, in remanding it a second time, should point out the manner in which the carrying out of the previous order seemed defective (9) If a party who is offered a remand elects to go on with the case as it stands, he is estopped from impugning the decision on that point (10) Where a case was remanded to be tried on the merits, the Court remanding considering it not barred, the Lower Court was held wrong in entering again into the question of limitation (11) For the Court cannot re open a matter already adjudicated upon between the parties (1) It has been held that when a case is sent back for trial on the merits the order of remand shuts out preliminary objections such as limitation or res adjudicata (2) or jurisdiction (3) On the other hand, it has been held that the remand of a case for trial on the merits does not prevent adjudication upon any other issue arising in the case, e.g. limitation, provided that such issue has not been adjudicated upon by the Court making the remand (4) The question whether sect 25 of the last Code, now sect 24, had application to a case remanded was considered in the case cited (5) It has been held that where the decision of the Court of first instance is not based on any preliminary ground and where the whole of the evidence has been taken and the conclusion of the Court relates to the merits of the case, the Appellate Court cannot set aside the decree under this rule (6)

"Preliminary point"—Prior to the amendment of the Code of 1882 by Act VII of 1888, sect 562 contained the words "So as to exclude any evidence of fact which appears to the Appellate Court essential to the determination of the rights of the parties," and the word "investigate" was used instead of the word "determine" at the end of the section The condition therefore necessary to justify a remand consisted prior to Act VII of 1888 in the exclusion of evidence of a material fact or in the omission to investigate the merits as the consequence of the decision on a preliminary question which the Appellate Court could not uphold (7)

The condition necessary to a remand after 1888 was the omission to determine the merits Therefore it was held competent for an Appellate Court to remand a case where the Court of first instance recorded evidence on all the issues and at the final hearing determined the suit erroneously on some particular point without expressing any opinion on the other issues (8) But there could be no remand where, though the Court held that the suit was barred by limitation it at the same time came to a definite decision on each of the other issues (9)

It was held that the expression "preliminary point" was used in sect 562 of the last Code, not in the sense of some point collateral to the merits, e.g. limitation, res judicata, and the like, but of some point preliminary to a general investigation of the merits. The words referred thus to some point either collateral to the merits which precluded their determination altogether or some particular question which, though relating to the merits, precluded their general determination (1). The term is somewhat ambiguous. The meaning would appear to be that the Appellate Court may remand where the Lower Court has disposed of a suit upon a point or issue, the determination of which has precluded the necessity for determining other points or issues in the suit, and such other points or issues have been left undetermined.

Sect 562 was held to authorize a remand only where the entire suit and not merely a portion of it had been disposed of by the Court upon a preliminary point (2). In an appeal from an order refusing to set aside a decree (sect 108 or O IX r 13 of this Code), the only case which can be remanded to be tried on its merits is the application under sect 108, and not the original case the decree in which is sought to be set aside (3). When, in contravention of the provisions of sect 202 of the Agra Tenancy Act, 1901, a Civil Court heard and determined a suit in which a question of tenant right was raised, and on appeal the Lower Appellate Court remanded the suit, it was held that that Court ought not to have done so, but should have passed the order required by sect 202 of the Act (4).

It not infrequently, however, happens that a remand is necessary in consequence of an error, omission, or irregularity by reason of which there has not been a proper trial or an effectual and complete adjudication of the suit. The former Code not providing for the case, difficulty was felt, (5) and recourse was had to an inherent jurisdiction (6) (the only powers of remand being those contained in sects 562 and 566 of that Code) (7) or a jurisdiction implied in the terms of other sections of the Code (8). So a case has been remanded where the suit was decided without the plaintiff being given a fair opportunity of that though the Legislature has expressly omitted to lay down as a positive rule that a remand may be granted in the cases referred to in the proposed, but rejected, amendment, for fear that a power expressed in such wide terms might be liable to abuse, the Court may, where that course is absolutely necessary for the ends of justice, exercise the power of remand in cases not falling within the precise terms of this rule or of r 23, post. Further, if an order of remand is erroneous a party who has consented to it may be estopped from contesting it, (1) and in no case are subsequent proceedings void merely because of such error (2). It has, however, been recently held that an Appellate Court has no inherent power to remand when the Lower Court has committed errors materially prejudicing the complainant, and that its only power of remand is under sect 107 (1) (b) as limited by this rule and is no wider than it was under the last Code (3). In the under-mentioned cases it has been held that an order of remand may be made even when the disposal has not been on a strictly preliminary point, e.g. where there has been no regular hearing of the matter and the evidence on which the disposal was made has not been placed on record (4). Where a judgment had been partly based on evidence not on the record it was held on second appeal that if such evidence was excepted it would be impossible to decide whether the remainder was sufficient to support the judgment and the case was remanded (5). In this case the lower Court had relied on a statement made by a pleader and it was held that such a statement must be regularly proved and permission to admit additional evidence was given.

“And the evidence”—It was reported that the practice in various provinces differed on the question whether evidence recorded in the proceedings leading up to the decree set aside under sect 562 was in itself available as evidence during the retrial or whether it could only be made admissible in the case of witnesses attending at the hearing by examining them upon their previous depositions as statements recorded in a different proceeding. The Legislature has shown itself to be of the opinion that, subject to all just exceptions, such depositions should of their own force be available as evidence. Evidence may be received from parties who did not appear at the former trial (6). Where the Judge in a remand observed that evidence was unnecessary, the declaration was held to sufficiently justify the plaintiff in making no further application for a summons on their witnesses (7). Where a review had been granted for the purpose of seeing whether a chittah ought not to be used and the case was remanded for a rehearing, the party was held to be concluded from objecting that the chittah was improperly made use of upon the rehearing (8). It has been to determine such issue itself, but should refer it for determination to the Court of first appeal (1) But see now sect 103, ante

25 Where the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred has omitted to frame or try any issue, or to determine any question of fact, which appears to the Appellate Court essential to the right decision of the suit upon the merits, the Appellate Court may, if necessary, frame issues, and refer the same for trial to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, and in such case shall direct such Court to take the additional evidence required;

and such Court shall proceed to try such issues, and shall return the evidence to the Appellate Court together with its finding thereon and the reasons therefor.

Omission to frame or try issue—See notes to r 23 Prior to sect 52 of Act VII of 1888, sect 566, which this rule replaces, contained in place of the words “if necessary” the words “and the evidence upon the record is not sufficient to enable the Appellate Court to determine such issue or question” The rule, it has been said, is intended to provide for cases where some point has come to light in the Appellate Court which has not been raised or the importance of which has not occurred to the parties or to the Judge in the Court below (2) Where, however, though no specific issue has been framed on a particular question yet the matter has been tried and determined without any objection on the part of the plaintiff who has not been taken by surprise, but was fully informed by the defendant’s list of documents and from cross-examination of his witnesses that the defence would be taken, it is undesirable in general that the case should be sent back to be retried on a special issue framed as to that particular question (3) The expression “determine any question of fact” means in a legal manner (4) The Court may (5) frame issues (6) provided that there has been an omission (7) on the part of the Lower Court The Appellate Court should frame the issues which are essential and send them to the Lower Court for trial, but should not remand and direct the Lower Court to frame the issues (8)

The issues should be specifically stated by the Appellate Court. It is not sufficient to direct the case to be decided in accordance with the observations in the judgment (1). It is always dangerous to allow parties to make a new case in a Mofussil Appellate Court, and the Courts as a general rule should not allow a point not appearing in the pleadings or raised in any other way in the first Court to be framed into an issue (2). A party cannot change the nature of the case after remand (3). Where a Judge proceeds under this rule he should not reverse the decree of the Lower Court and remand the suit, but should frame the necessary issues and send them down for trial, and keep the suit pending until the return of the first Court's finding on the issues with the record of the trial (4). The effect of such an order is not a re-hearing and as to the issues sent down the first Court has no power to deal with the case (5). The Court is to direct additional evidence to be taken, and the parties are entitled to have the opportunity of giving evidence upon the fresh issue, even though the order of remand contains no express direction to that effect (6). The parties should have the fullest opportunity to produce their evidence (7). When a case is remanded by one Judge and subsequently comes before another of equal jurisdiction (8) or the Judge's successor, (9) the latter officer cannot set aside the order of remand. So where a Judge remanded a case to be tried on a certain issue and directed the Munsiff to give plaintiff a decree according to the decision at which he would arrive, and the case went back in appeal before another Judge, it was held that the Appellate Court was limited to seeing whether the issue was a proper issue or not, and could not go behind the order (10). A Court to which a case is remanded for retrial, on a particular issue amongst others, cannot on remand allow that issue to be abandoned and proceed to try the case upon the other issues raised, (11) nor can the Court refer the case to an arbitrator, (12) and when the case is remanded to the Lower Appellate Court for findings on certain issues, it is not competent to that Court to delegate the decision of those issues to a Court subordinate thereto, (1) for when issues are remitted under this rule, such issues are triable only by the Court which was originally seized of the case (2) There is no appeal under the Letters Patent from an order referring to issues for trial (3)

"Return"—Where an Appellate Court has made an order under this rule the return to such order must be made to the same Court and such Court is not competent to transfer the appeal for disposal elsewhere (4) Where a Judge has heard the argument on some of the issues and expressed his decision upon them he is not bound to hear the whole case on the return made to another issue framed under these sections (5) The findings upon issues remanded by the High Court in second appeal cannot be challenged upon the evidence as in first appeals but objections to these findings must be restricted to the limits within which the original pleas in second appeal are confined (6) In any case the Court may direct the appellant to file a copy of the findings of the Court below and may direct the Court below to re-examine the evidence and to re-form its own opinion on the evidence and record its findings with the reasons for them (7) Where a party is dissatisfied with a decision and appeals and re-opens the whole case, he must acquiesce in the result finally arrived at by the Court below in accordance with the instructions of the High Court in his special appeal (8)

26 (1) Such evidence and findings shall form part of the record in the suit, and either party may, within a time to be fixed by the Appellate Court, present a memorandum of objections to any finding

(2) After the expiration of the period so fixed for presenting such memorandum the Appellate Court shall proceed to determine the appeal

Objections.—The Appellate Court on the return of the finding and evidence should fix a reasonable time (9) for the parties to file their objections. If no objection is raised by either party within the period allowed neither has a right to be heard though the Court has a discretion to allow objections afterwards and if no objection be raised then or at the hearing the Appellate Court is not bound to amend the finding but apart from any objection by the parties it

he could have given below (1) Ordinarily speaking it is only when a Court sees that from some inadvertence, mistake, or surprise a party has not adduced evidence which he was capable of adducing and that he is likely to be prejudiced by the omission, that the Court should allow further evidence to be taken (2) The test as to whether additional evidence should be received depends on the question whether or not the Appellate Court requires the evidence 'to enable it to pronounce judgment' or for any other substantial cause, and as to this the Appellate Court is to be the sole judge (3) The word 'requires' means needs or finds needful The legitimate occasion for this rule is when on examining the evidence as it stands, some inherent lacuna or defect becomes apparent, and not where a discovery is made outside the Court of fresh evidence and the application is made to import it That is the subject of review of judgment (4) An application to admit fresh documents the genuineness of which can be tested with certainty, stands on a much more favourable footing than an application to admit fresh parol evidence after the pinch and pressure of the case has been sustained, (5) but they should not be admitted if the appellant cannot show sufficient cause, (6) or generally if having had an opportunity of tendering them in the Court below he omitted to do so, (7) or resisted their production, (8) or if they do not bear on the issues tried by the Court of first instance (9) Where the Appellate Court with the assent of both sides examines witnesses and also admits documentary evidence, and there is nothing to show that such admission was objected to it is not open to any party on appeal to the Privy Council to take exception to the regularity of this procedure (10) As each case must depend on its own circumstances it is not profitable to deal in detail with the cases in which additional evidence has been allowed or refused (11) A local inquiry may be ordered under this rule (12) The improper reception of evidence under this rule is not sufficient to reverse a decision if independently of that evidence, there is sufficient evidence on the record (1) It has been held that on an appeal against an order made under O XVII r 3, when the plaintiff was present, but his witnesses were not, and no application for adjournment or to enforce the attendance of the witnesses was made, the Appellate Court should proceed under this rule to direct the admission of fresh evidence, and under r 25 of this Order to refer the issues (which in fact had never been tried) for trial to the Court of first instance, directing that Court to return findings (2)

The power can be exercised even after the case has been remanded on special appeal (3) It is not necessary that the party before applying to the Appellate Court should have sought for a review of the original Court's judgment and asked it to receive the evidence (4) After a review has been admitted fresh evidence may be taken under this rule (5)

An appeal does not lie from an order admitting or refusing to admit additional evidence, (6) but both may be considered in an appeal from the final decree

under this rule gives no right of appeal to the Privy Council (9) This and the next rule are not, it has been held, applicable to proceedings before Civil Courts under sect 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code (10)

Record of reasons for admission.—These are strictly required, (11) and should be stated in open Court in the presence of the parties (12) It is a salutary provision which operates as a check against a too easy reception of evidence at a late stage of litigation, and the statement of the reasons may inspire confidence and disarm objection (13) But such record of reasons is not a condition precedent to the reception of the evidence, so that the omission to do so would not render the evidence inadmissible (14)

28 Wherever additional evidence is allowed to be produced, the Appellate Court may either take such evidence, or direct the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, or any other subordinate Court, to take such evidence and to send it when taken to the Appellate Court

"Or direct the Court."—If the order is for the taking of particular evidence the Lower Court cannot go beyond it and take other evidence, (1) though in a case where A was directed to be examined and was ill, his agent was allowed to be examined in his stead (2) It has been held that the lower Court taking evidence acts in a ministerial capacity (sed quære), and that the parties may object to the admissibility of the evidence recorded before it without objection, when it is submitted for the consideration of the Appellate Court (3)

29 Where additional evidence is directed or allowed to be taken, the Appellate Court shall specify the points to which the evidence is to be confined, and record on its proceedings the points so specified

Judgment in appeal

30 The Appellate Court, after hearing the parties or their pleaders and referring to any part of the proceedings, whether on appeal or in the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, to which reference may be considered necessary, shall pronounce judgment in open Court, either at once or on some future day, of which notice shall be given to the parties or their pleaders

"After hearing"—It is the duty of the Appellate Court to allow the parties or their pleaders to submit the evidence to it at the hearing in open Court and to make upon the evidence so submitted every comment and found upon it every arguement on the ground that the affidavits containing facts proving such an allegation ought to be clear and exhaustive and should leave no doubt upon the subject, excluding the possibility of the Judge having done that which it was his duty to do. The judgment may be given at once. But there are cases, especially complicated cases, in which it is desirable that the Judge should have an opportunity of considering the evidence at leisure before giving judgment (1) This rule only authorizes the Court to pronounce judgment after hearing the parties and judgment pronounced without hearing them is unauthorized by the Code. Thus where the appellant died before the hearing of the appeal, but his pleader did not know of his death until after the appeal had been decided, and an application of his son to the District Judge to have his name placed on the record and the appeal reargued, was rejected, held by the High Court that as the representative of the plaintiff appellant applied within the prescribed time to have his name entered on the record the Court was bound to enter his name, and in not doing so the Court failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law. As the judgment was pronounced without hearing him, it was unauthorized by the Code (1). It has been held that the senior pleader who is present before the Court has the entire control of a case in the High Court and that it is not open to the junior pleader to take any ground of appeal which his senior has not thought fit to argue, except only when the senior has obtained the permission of the Court that that course should be taken (2).

31. The judgment of the Appellate Court shall be in [s 574]

Contents, date and signature and shall state—nature of judgment

 - (b) the decision thereon,
 - (c) the reasons for the decision, and
 - (d) where the decree appealed from is reversed or varied, the relief to which the appellant is entitled,

Judgment of Appeal Court—The duty of the Appellate Court is not to interfere with the judgment of the first Court until it is perfectly satisfied in its own mind that the conclusion arrived at by the first Court is erroneous. If there is any doubt in the case the benefit of that doubt ought to be given to the respondent and not to the appellant, for it must be presumed in law that the judgment of the Lower Court is right until the contrary is shown. No doubt the Appellate Court may make further inquiries, but such inquiries ought to be made with discretion and only in those cases where the Appellate Court finds it unable to do justice to the parties on the evidence and material as they stand upon the record (3). The judgment therefore of the first Court if not shown to be erroneous, ought to be affirmed, and it is for the appellant to show manifest (4) errors in the decree appealed from (5). The Court of Appeal ought to give great weight, but not undue weight to the opinion of the Judge who tried the cause and saw the witnesses and their demeanour. That gives him considerable advantages over those who only draw this information from perusing the notes. But still, though the Court of Appeal ought not lightly to find against the opinion of the Judge who tried the cause, that Court, if convinced that the inference in favour of the plaintiff ought not to have been drawn from the evidence, should find the verdict the other way (1). The parties to the cause are entitled, as well on questions of fact as on questions of law, to demand the decision of the Court of Appeal, and that Court cannot excuse itself from the task of weighing conflicting evidence and drawing its own inferences and conclusions, though it should always bear in mind that it has neither seen nor heard the witnesses and should make due allowance in this respect (2). "If we are to accept," says James, L J, "as final the decision of the Court of first instance in every case where there is a conflict of evidence, our labours would be very much lightened. But then, that would be in truth to do away with the right of appeal in all cases of nuisance, for there is never one brought into Court in which there is not contradictory evidence, and there have been, I am satisfied, a larger percentage of appeals in those cases than in any other" (3). And therefore the Judge of an Appellate Court ought to explain manifestly clear from the probabilities attached to certain circumstances in the case that the Court below was wrong in the conclusion drawn from such evidence, that however necessary as regards a Court of Appeal far removed from India, it need not be extended as one equally necessary and applicable with the same strictness, to a Court of Appeal in India, which has the opportunity of calling witnesses and has all the advantages to be derived from a personal acquaintance with the people, their feelings, habits, and character as well as other local advantages (5).

The dismissal of an appeal under sect 551 (now r 11) by a Court whose decision may be the subject of an appeal, does not relieve the Court from the necessity of writing a judgment which, according to the provisions of this rule, should show the points raised, the decision upon those points, and the reasons for deciding them. Thus, where an Appellate Court's judgment was simply "Appeal rejected under sect 551 of the Code of Civil Procedure," held that

But see Heera Lal v Mohesh Chunder, 1 Hyde, 105 (1862), where it was held that the High Court sitting in appeal on questions of fact, is guided by the same rules as those of the Privy Council when they sit upon motions for a rule for new trials from the Old Supreme Court

the judgment was not in conformity with law, and the case was remanded for disposing of the appeal according to law (1)

A Court of second appeal cannot enter into the merits of the appeal, in

The rule here laid down cannot be too strictly enforced. A judgment which falls short of complying with the clear provisions of this section is, as such, worthless for the purposes contemplated by the law. Its imperative provisions apply alike to cases remanded by the first Appellate Court for trial of issues and to those in which no such remand has taken place (2). As the High Court in second appeal is bound to accept the findings of fact arrived at by the Lower Court, it should insist upon a due obedience by those Courts of the mandate contained in this rule (3).

Under clause (42) of the Letters Patent the Judges of the High Court are bound to record the reasons for their decisions, and these reasons should, on appeal to England, be transmitted with the record for information at the hearing by the Judicial Committee (4). These reasons should be stated publicly at the hearing and not reserved to influence the Court of Appeal (5). But it has been held to be doubtful whether the former section applied to cases where the High Court, having heard the judgment of the Court below and argument upon that judgment, came to the conclusion that it was right and agreed with the reasons which it gave (6).

It was held that on remand under sect. 566 of the last Code that sect. 567 required the lower Court of Appeal to proceed to determine the appeal, but sect. 571 required it to pronounce judgment, and sect. 574 (this rule) was imperative as to what the judgment was to contain. The Appellate Court was required to give its own decision and the reasons for it upon the issues remanded to the original Court under sect. 566 (7). These provisions apply alike to cases remanded by the first Appellate Court for the trial of issues and to those in which no such remand has taken place (8). A Judge having remanded a case for further evidence to be taken and a fresh finding recorded on a question of fact, is bound, though there is no memorandum of objection, to state in the correctness of the finding and come to a conclusion whether it is correct or not, unless its correctness has been admitted by the party to whom it is adverse (1) An appellant is fairly entitled to an expression of opinion of the Appellate Court on the grounds taken in the memorandum of appeal (2) If, however, the Appellate Court is not asked to express any opinion on any particular ground of appeal stated in the memorandum of appeal, the Court is not at fault if no decision is passed upon it If, having had his attention called to it a Judge fails to decide such point, the proper course for the parties aggrieved is to ask him to review his judgment In order to satisfy the High Court that a point which the Judge omitted to notice was actually taken in the oral pleadings a party may put in either an affidavit of some person who heard the point raised or a copy of the petition to the Judge drawing attention to the omission with his order (3) Where this rule has not been complied with and action is required the Court may either reverse the decree and remand the case for a fresh decision (4) and this is generally done, or the Court may (it has been said), without reversing the decree, retain the case on appeal but return the proceedings in order that the Lower Court may state its reasons (5) But though a decision may not be as clear as it might have been, if there are words to be found which substantially dispose of the case set up, the Court may consider it unnecessary to remand for a clearer finding (6) It is, however, no objection that a judgment is short if it sufficiently appears that the evidence has been considered and the Court has given its opinion thereon (7) As to whether a Lower Court's omission to comply (8) with the terms of this rule can be considered a ground for second appeal see notes to sect 100, ante

Sect 565 of the last Code was held to enable the Appellate Court in some cases to determine a question of fact upon the evidence then on the record but not to declare a right in favour of one of the parties where no issue had been framed on the point, and the right had not been set up in the Lower Court (1) The Judge should specifically decide each point or points raised and give his reasons. It is not sufficient to say that by confirming generally the order of the Lower Court it has therefore virtually tried and disposed of the particular point when no mention has been made by it (2) Where the Appellate Court does not sufficiently consider important matters such as sufficiency of notice or a question of the nature of a tenure, its judgment will be set aside (3)

Clause (c)—Having stated the points for determination and the decision thereon the Court must state its reasons therefor (4) The provisions of this rule are imperative, and require the Appellate Court to give its own decision and the reasons for it (5) and a judgment which falls short of complying with the clear provisions of this section is as such worthless for the purposes contemplated by the law (6) It is not however laid down in this rule that the judgment of the Appellate Court, any more than the judgment of the Court of the first instance is to contain a review or setting forth of the whole of the

for which he thinks particular portions of the evidence to have been more or less worthy of consideration. The Judge of the Appellate Court who most fully gave his reasons or his judgment and most fully entered into the merits of the case before him would be held to have most efficiently and intelligently carried out the duties required of him (7) In certifying to the High Court the findings on issues sent back on remand the Lower Appellate Court in the absence of any distinct admission by the appellant's pleader that the finding of the first

Court on the issues was correct, is bound to form its own opinion on the evidence and record its finding with the reasons therefor (1) It is no judgment to say merely that a point is worthless (2) or absurd, (3) or that the plaintiff has not been able to make out his case, (4) or that on the evidence the claim is proved, (5) or that there is no ground for appeal, (6) or the like. The mere adoption of and concurrence with the reasons given by the Lower Court has been considered insufficient, (7) for an appellant has a right to the opinion of the Appellate Court on the case and the evidence given in support of it. It is sometimes said that where a judgment is one of affirmance the Court need not go very fully into the reasons. It would, however, be more correct to say that if a judgment is defective in this respect the defect is of a more serious character in the case of a judgment of reversal than of affirmance. It is very desirable that the Appellate Court should state with as much fullness as the nature of the case may require the reasons for its decision even when it affirms the decision of the first Court (8). But it is not obligatory on an Appellate Court either to take notice of every item of evidence produced by the parties or to meet categorically every one of the arguments advanced by the first Court in support of its decision, if it gives special reasons of its own for coming to an opposite conclusion (9). It is sufficient if the judgment deals with all the material points involved in the case (10). It is impossible to lay down any general rule as to when the Court should consider that the reasons for a particular finding by the Lower Appellate Court must be stated. There may be cases in which the omission to state the reasons would render the judgments so unintelligible that the High Court could not pronounce any opinion upon whether it was right in law. In

Clause (d)—When an Appellate Court, in a judgment which in some material matters differs from the conclusion of the first Court, upholds the decree of the first Court, it must specify in the decree the exact modifications which its conclusions have necessitated, as contemplated by this rule, (2) and when it reverses a decree, it should state the relief which it considers the appellant entitled to (3) agree as to the form which the decree in appeal shall take, or as to the order to be made in appeal, the Appellate Court may pass a decree or make an order accordingly.

Judgment in appeal—As to functions of the Appeal Court, see notes to sect. 96 and r 4 and the last rule of this Order (4). The powers conferred by this rule are powers which require that parties should be in accord with each other at the time when the decree is pronounced by the Appellate Court. The use of the word "may" indicates discretion in a Court and does not force the Court to pass a decree in any manner which goes beyond the scope of its discretionary power. Thus where an application containing the terms of a compromise was presented to the High Court by one of the parties and the Solehnama was sent down to the Lower Court for verification but the attendance of the parties for that purpose could not be procured the High Court refused to pass a decree under sect. 577, in accordance with the terms of the Solehnama (5)

may not have filed any appeal or objections

Powers—This rule, which is taken from English O 58, r 4, is new, and has been inserted because (as the Select Committee said) it is most imperative that an Appellate Court should have the fullest power to do complete justice between the parties (1) It is applicable to all cases where an appeal is heard after this Code came into force (2) The latter part of the clause is explained by the illustration (3) It is open to the Appellate Court to vary the decree appealed against, either in points (if any) in which it is erroneous or in respect of supplemental matters which are admitted (4) It is entitled to take cognizance of events which have happened since the filing of the appeal (5) or, in other words, it is open to the Appellate Court to vary a decree under appeal not only for error, but also on grounds which have come into existence since it was passed (6) The Courts, in the exercise of the powers conferred by this rule, should not lose sight of the other provisions of the Code, nor of the Court Fees Act, nor of the Limitation Act In particular, it should bear in mind the case stated in the Illustration (7) R 22 of this Order shows that it is intended that (prima facie at least) a respondent should not be allowed to take exception to so much of a decree as was against him without complying with the provisions of the rule (8)

"May not have filed any appeal or objection."—See notes to rr 1 and 22 of this Order, as also notes to sect 96, ante

34. Where the appeal is heard by more Judges than one, any Judge dissenting from the judgment of the Court shall state in writing the decision or order which he thinks should be passed on the appeal, and he may state his reasons for the same.

(4) The decree shall be signed and dated by the Judge or Judges who passed it.

Provided that where there are more Judges than one and there is a difference of opinion among them, it shall not be necessary for any Judge dissenting from the judgment of the Court to sign the decree.

Appellate decree—The appellate decree is the first decree and the only decree capable of being executed after it has been passed whether the same reverses, modifies, or confirms the decree of the Court from which the appeal was made (1) It is clear from the terms of this rule that in any case the decree to be executed not only for the costs of the appeal but for the costs of the suit is the decree of the Appellate Court only. The effect of the rule is to cause the decree of the Appellate Court to supersede the decree of the Court below even when the decree of the Appellate Court is one which merely affirms that decree below and does not reverse it or modify it. The only decree that can be amended is the decree to be executed, and the decree to be executed is the decree of the Appellate Court and not the decree of the Court below (2) If a decree is made in appeal so that the appellate decree becomes the one to be executed, time runs from its date and not from that of the original decree (3) When, however, an appellant withdraws an appeal no decree is made. The order of the Court does not come within the definition of the word "decree." The litigation commenced with the presentation of the appeal is merely discontinued, and the case remains as if the appeal had never taken place and the decree appealed against becomes final and time runs from the date of that decree (4) The only Court which has jurisdiction to amend an appellate decree is the Court of Appeal (5) When two parties to a suit appeal so that the one appeal is but the cross appeal of the other, there ought to be only one final decree made between the two parties. Not only is there nothing to prevent, but it is the duty of the Court to make one decree, and only one decree, between the same parties (1). The date which the decree should bear is the date when the judgment was delivered (2).

"Relief granted," etc.—A decree should be so drawn up as to need no interpretation other than may be gathered from the language of the decree itself, and there should be no need of reference to any document or paper whatsoever, unless such document or paper is attached to the decree and forms part of it. While, on the one hand, it is true that the decree should be drawn up in this manner, it is also just that litigants who have been successful should not be deprived of the fruits of their success owing to carelessness on the part of the Court or officer charged with the preparation of decrees. Thus where a decree in its terms, is ambiguous, the Court executing the decree can refer to the pleadings in the suit in which the decree was passed to ascertain its precise meaning (3). Again, where the decree omits to reserve the rights of prior mortgages admitted by all the parties to the suit, it ought to be construed with reference to the

should be drawn up in such a form as will show in itself the ultimate relief granted. If the Appellate Court decrees an additional amount and the decree as drawn up only mentions the amount decreed by the first Court, and the amount due to the decree-holder is ascertainable from the decree of the first Court and the finding of the Lower Appellate Court, then he should obtain execution for the amount found in his favour and for his costs (5). This rule does not require the claim to be stated in the decree so as to make the statement a part of the decree itself (6).

Costs—It was held that the former section, when it provided that the decree of the Appellate Court should state by what parties and in what proportion the costs incurred in the appeal and the costs in the suit were to be paid, referred to the parties who were parties to the appeal, and not to parties who were not arrayed either as appellants or as respondents in the appeal, but who, under sect 544 of the former Code, might take the benefit of the decree (7). This section referred (as does also this rule) to cases where there are more parties than one made liable for costs, which necessitate the fixing by the Court of Appeal of the proportion in which the costs are to be paid (8).

It is the business of the Appellate Court finally determining a suit to decide by which of the parties before it the costs shall be borne, it is not at liberty to declare that the costs of the suit shall be borne by the unsuccessful party in a suit to be thereafter brought, because it might be that the suit will not be brought at all and in that case there will be no execution or the plaintiff and the defendant might be left to bear their own costs (1) Though the Judge must state by what parties (and in what proportions if necessary) the costs of the original suits are to be paid he is not bound to go into particulars, or append to his judgment a schedule setting forth the different items which make up the costs of the first Court. He takes the amount of costs for granted and decides who is to pay them (2) Where the order of the Appellate Court awarded (a) all the costs of the appeal amounting to a certain sum named (b) all the costs in the original Court not naming any sum and (c) the costs of the remand and it was argued that the decree holders were only entitled to the sum of money specifically named in the High Court's decree for costs and that they could not have the costs of the first Court because the amount was not mentioned nor the costs of the remand because such remand costs if they come in under any head at all would come under the head of costs of the appeal and that these had not been allowed beyond the sum fixed by the decree it was held that the decree was perfectly clear as to what it meant to give and there was nothing in the law which made the order for costs bad simply because it did not specify the exact sum to be paid as costs of the Lower Court that there was nothing to make it incumbent on a Court of Appeal to specify the amount of the costs incurred in the first Court. It had only to declare the proportion in which they were to be paid. As to the costs of the remand it was held that the decree declared that besides the costs of the appeal and the costs in the original Court the costs of the remand were to be paid it did not matter whether those costs were included or not in the appeal costs (3) But though the law does not direct that a Court should annex to every decree the costs incurred by both parties yet it is a convenient practice to do so (4) When an Appellate Court decrees an appeal and gives costs of its own Court the costs of the first Court should be included in the decree (5) When an appeal is dismissed on wholly different grounds from those relied on by the Court below the dismissal should be without costs (6)

ORDER XLIII

Appeals from Orders

1. An appeal shall lie from the following orders under the provisions of section 104, namely —
- Appeals from orders*
- (a) an order under rule 10 of Order VII returning a plaint to be presented to the proper Court,
 - (b) an order under rule 10 of Order VIII pronouncing judgment against a party,
 - (c) an order under rule 9 of Order IX rejecting an application (in a case open to appeal) for an order to set aside the dismissal of a suit,
 - (d) an order under rule 13 of Order IX rejecting an application (in a case open to appeal) for an order to set aside a decree passed ex parte,
 - (e) an order under rule 4 of Order X pronouncing judgment against a party,
 - (f) an order under rule 21 of Order XI,
 - (g) an order under rule 10 of Order XVI for the attachment of property,
 - (h) an order under rule 20 of Order XVI pronouncing judgment against a party,
 - (i) an order under rule 34 of Order XXI on an objection to the draft of a document or of an endorsement,
 - (j) an order under rule 72 or rule 92 of Order XXII setting aside or refusing to set aside a sale,
 - (k) an order under rule 9 of Order XXIII refusing to set aside the abatement or dismissal of a suit,
 - (l) an order under rule 10 of Order XXIII giving or refusing to give leave,
 - (m) an order under rule , of Order XXIII recording or refusing to record an agreement, compromise or satisfaction,
 - (n) an order under rule 1 of Order XXIV rejecting an application (in a case open to appeal) for an order to set aside the dismissal of a suit,

- (o) an order under rule 3 or rule 8 of Order XXXIV refusing to extend the time for the payment of mortgage-money;
- (p) orders in interpleader suits under rule 3, rule 4 or rule 6 of Order XXXV,
- (q) an order under rule 2, rule 3 or rule 6 of Order XXXVIII,
- (r) an order under rule 1, rule 2, rule 4 or rule 10 of Order XXXIX,
- (s) an order under rule 1 or rule 4 of Order XL,
- (t) an order of refusal under rule 19 of Order XLI to re-admit, or under rule 21 of Order XLI to re-hear, an appeal;
- (u) an order under rule 23 of Order XLI remanding a case, where an appeal would lie from the decree of the Appellate Court,
- (v) an order made by any Court other than a High Court refusing the grant of a certificate under rule 6 of Order XLV;
- (w) an order under rule 4 of Order XLVII granting an application for review

Appeals from Orders—See the notes to the various rules referred to. As regards clauses (b), (c), and (h), these orders were under the previous law appealable as decrees. But having regard to the present definition of decree they would no longer be appealable in that way and it has therefore been necessary to make them appealable as orders. It has been held that under this rule an appeal lies from negative orders under O XXXIX (1) and that if there is an appeal against an order made under any rule there is an appeal against any order made under part of that rule (2).

ORDER XLIV.

Pauper Appeals.

592

1. Any person entitled to prefer an appeal, who is unable to pay the fee required for the memorandum of appeal, may present an application accompanied by a memorandum of appeal, and may be allowed to appeal as a pauper, subject, in all matters including the presentation of such application, to the provisions relating to suits by paupers, in so far as those provisions are applicable.

Who may appeal as pauper
Procedure on application for admission of appeal
Provided that the Court shall reject the application unless, upon a perusal thereof and of the judgment and decree appealed from, it sees reason to think that the decree is contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law, or is otherwise erroneous or unjust

593

2 The inquiry into the pauperism of the applicant may be made either by the Appellate Court or under the orders of the Appellate Court by the Court from whose decision the appeal is preferred.

Inquiry into pauperism.
Provided that if the applicant was allowed to sue or appeal as a pauper in the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, no further inquiry in respect of his pauperism shall be necessary unless the Appellate Court sees cause to direct such inquiry

Application.—In the case of appeals the rule requires two separate documents to be presented—an application for leave to appeal as a pauper and a memorandum of appeal. When the Judge disposes of the pauper application he does not thereby necessarily dispose of the appeal. There are two separate documents and in this respect this case differs from a petition to sue as a pauper which includes both the plaint, the allegations as to pauperism and the prayer to sue as a pauper. In the latter case, when the pauper petition is rejected under O XXXIII r 7 the proceedings are at an end and the Judge has no power to allow it to be stamped as a plaint r 15 of that Order providing the course, open to the applicant viz to institute a suit in the ordinary manner. On the other hand in proceedings under this rule, when the Judge refuses leave to appeal as a pauper, he effectually deals with the pauper application but he does not necessarily deal with the memorandum of appeal which accompanies it. On his rejection of the application, there is nothing to prevent him from treating the memorandum as still a memorandum of appeal if the appellant, on being refused leave to appeal as a pauper, desires, with the aid of borrowed funds or the assistance of friends to continue the appeal. If O XXXIII r 15 applied to the memorandum of appeal, the result would in practice be that the appeal would be time barred when the application was refused. The result is that a Court is under no legal obligation to dismiss the appeal if and when it refused leave to appeal as a pauper (1).

"Subject, in all matters"—A petition for leave to appeal as a pauper is presented together with a memorandum of appeal. It was held under the last Code that the presentation of the application itself was not subject to the rules contained in Chapter XXVI of that Code. But after an application had been presented, all action taken subsequent to such presentation was by the terms of the section to be subject to the rules contained in that Chapter. Therefore sect 404 of that Code, which required, except in certain circumstances, that the application should be presented in person, did not apply (2). In any case, if sect 404 did apply, an appeal presented on behalf of an exempted pauper by a vakil retained under an ordinary retainer and not authorized to sign as agent was considered insufficiently presented (3). A petition presented by a duly authorized agent of an exempted person though not by an advocate, vakil, or attorney, was properly presented (4). Although the Madras High Court held that the question of the presentation of an appeal was not subject to the rules contained in Chapter XXVI of the former Code the same Court determined that the question of the right to appeal under the section corresponding with r 1 of this Order was subject to such rules. Therefore when at the time of the institution of the suit there was subsisting an agreement falling within the terms of sect 407 (d) now (O XXXIII r 5 cl (e)) no leave to appeal under r 1 could be given to the plaintiff who by such agreement had allowed other persons to obtain an interest in the subject matter

(1) Bai Fult Desai Manorbhai 22 B 849 850 855-857 (1897) per Farran C.J. Canby J., decided the case on the ground that there was sufficient cause for not presenting the appeal within proper time under s 5 of the Limitation Act. In Bal Nath v. Jagannath 13 A 305 (1891) where an application to appeal as a pauper was rejected and a regular appeal on a proper stamp was subsequently presented, but after time it was held not to relate back to the time of the application on behalf of paupers. As to extension of time when application is rejected see Jumna Bai v. Nissam 21 B 570 (1897).

(1887) which follow Bhugobutty Kar v. Gunesb Dutt 21 W R 308 (1874). In Hararan Singh v. Mulammai Raza 4 A 91 (1891) also the High Court refused under s 622 to interfere with an order rejecting an application which was presented by a pleader. In Anil Warisun Nissam Bahi Baksh 24 A 172 (1901) appears to assume that presentation in person is necessary except in the case of persons exempted. In re Naras however, states several circumstances in favour of the rule in the text.

of the suit (1) The amendment now includes the presentation of the application and has been made to avoid the conclusion at which the Madras High Court arrived in the decision cited

After presentation of the petition an inquiry as to pauperism is directed, and the application to appeal as a pauper is refused or granted (2) The application must be presented within thirty days from the date of the decree appealed against and no extension can be allowed under sect 5 of the Limitation Act (3) The Code of 1859 directed (4) that the inquiry might be conducted either by the Appellate Court, or by the Court from whose decision the appeal was made under the orders of the Appellate Court, provided that if the applicant was allowed to sue in forma pauperis in the Court below no further inquiry was necessary unless the Appellate Court should see special cause to direct such inquiry, and these provisions have been reproduced in sect 593 of the last Code and r 2 of this Order

The proceedings are subject to the provisions mentioned only "in so far as those provisions are applicable" So if the appellant is found to be a pauper, and the appeal is admitted, he cannot be called in to give security for costs (5) It would render the section nugatory if the Judge could say that although the applicant was a pauper, and although there was just ground for appealing (for such a decision is required by the proviso) a condition shall be imposed which in the case of a pauper, would render it impossible to go on with the appeal The question has already been discussed as to whether this rule is subject to O XXXIII r 3 and a memorandum of appeal to r 15 of that Order

Proviso to r 1—This is mandatory, being a necessary safeguard for the benefit of litigants who find themselves opposed by paupers and the Courts should be careful to see that the proviso is satisfied It is to be noticed that the Court must come to its conclusion upon a perusal only of the application the judgment and decree This proviso is apt to be overlooked, but it would provide a safeguard against this if the Judge or Bench admitting a pauper appeal were to express and record very briefly the reasons for granting leave, so that the Appellate Court may have an assurance that the leave was properly given (6) an application on the original side of the High Court it was held that no appeal lay from an order of a single Judge of the High Court made under this rule rejecting an application for leave to appeal in forma pauperis (1). These decisions however, proceeded on the ground that the right of appeal given by the Letters Patent is subject to the limitations on appeal presented by the Code (2). It is, however, now law so far as the Calcutta and Madras High Courts are concerned that the interpretation to be placed on the decision of the Privy Council (3) is that sect 588 (now 104) of the Code does not touch the right of appeal given by the Letters Patent (4).

Respondents.—The Code provides for pauper plaintiffs and appellants, but not for pauper defendants and respondents. Objections by a respondent to a decree under O XLI r 22 cannot be filed in forma pauperis. If a pauper desires to contest any part of the decree of the Court of first instance which is unfavourable to him he should directly appeal as a pauper and as an appellant claim the benefit of this section (5). The opinion has been expressed that the omission was unintentional (6) but on the other hand it has been said that the reason why no exception is made in favour of a pauper respondent probably was that he already had the opportunity of directly making an appeal without expense for court fees and that an inquiry into his pauperism at the last stage of the case would involve great delay and inconvenience (7). The omission now must be taken to be intentional the Legislature considering that the exceptional liberty of moving a Court in forma pauperis should not extend to objections to appeals.

determined by a Division Bench of the High Court, which in theory of law is a decision of the High Court. All that a Judge of the High Court can in most cases do after that, is to assist the parties in bringing their appeal before the Privy Council. Of course, an Act of the Imperial Parliament, or a provision of the Letters Patent, issued in pursuance of an Act of Parliament or an order issued by His Majesty in Council, might confer upon the High Court, or a Judge of that Court, not only power to admit or reject an appeal, but might make the right to appeal dependent upon that admission or rejection. But if that has been done in any case whatever, it is only in the cases in which the High Court has power to declare that the case is a fit one for appeal. The Courts in India have no power to admit or allow an appeal unless expressly authorized to do so by competent authority (1). The admission of an appeal to the Privy Council is not a matter as to which the High Court has any discretion provided that the requirements of the law are satisfied. All that the High Court has to do is to see that the requirements of sect 110 are satisfied. If they are, an appeal lies under sect 109 as a matter of right. The application for a certificate that these requirements are satisfied is merely preliminary and ancillary to the admission of the appeal (2).

"Amount or value"—See notes to sect 110, ante

"Otherwise."—By sect 109 and this rule, an appeal may be granted if the High Court certifies that the case is fit for appeal "otherwise," i.e. when not meeting the conditions of sect 110. That is clearly intended to meet special cases, such, for example, as those in which the point in dispute is not measurable by money, though it may be of great public or private importance. To certify that a case is of that kind, though it is left entirely in the discretion of the Court, is a judicial process which cannot be performed without special exercise of that discretion, evinced by the fitting certificate. In the absence of the conditions required by the Code, to give the right of appeal, no certificate under this rule can be issued even with the assent of the other party (3). Whether the matter is under the appealable value, there should be an application under this clause before the proper Court in India for a certificate (4).

"Notice . . . on the opposite party"—If a respondent appears and a notice served, of an intended application to have a petition of appeal to the Privy Council received, but does not object his costs of that application are together and the decree in one applying in principle to the other two suits, (1) is also where A and B purchased the same properties deriving title from different persons. The value of the properties with mere profits was over Rs 10,000. B granted two part leases of the properties to different persons, A was, therefore obliged to bring two suits for the recovery of the properties, and the value of the subject matter in each suit was less than Rs 10,000 (2). But where there were distinct causes separate judgments given in each suit and the suits were not consolidated in Courts below but were all along treated as separate and distinct actions such suits it was held could not be consolidated for the purpose of appeal to the Privy Council (3). These principles have been embodied in this rule which is now. And it has been held under it that where the fundamental question is common to all the suits and the cases are tried together and decided by the same judgment the suits will be consolidated for purposes of pecuniary valuation even though a substantial question of law arises in some of the suits and not in others (4).

When an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council is made in more than one suit which have not been consolidated though the points to be decided are the same in all of them it must be shown that in each of the suits the amount or value of the matter in dispute in appeal to His Majesty in Council is Rs 10,000 or upwards (5). But in a recent case a large number of suits for recovery of possession of distinct parcels of land were tried together dealt with in one judgment, and were decreed in favour of the plaintiffs, of these some were for sums over Rs 10,000 and leave to appeal was granted, of the remaining cases, each taken separately, the value was below Rs 10,000 yet if taken collectively the aggregate reached that amount and all the cases were dependent on the same judgment, leave to appeal was granted in the suits where the value of the subject of each suit was below Rs 10,000 (6).

5. In the event of any dispute arising between the parties as to the amount or value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance, or as to the amount or value of the subject matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council, the Court to which a petition for a certificate is made under rule 2 may, if it thinks fit, refer such dispute for report to the Court of first instance, which last mentioned Court shall proceed to determine such amount or value and shall return its report together with the evidence to the Court by which the reference was made.

single Judge called the "Judge of the Privy Council Appeal Department,"(1) and there is no appeal from the order of such a Judge,(2) or it may be given by a Bench consisting of more than one Judge hearing the applications for leave to appeal to the Privy Council. The certificate and not the order for the certificate is the document which their Lordships are bound to consider and act upon, and unless the certificate upon which the leave to appeal is based is in such a form as to justify the leave, their Lordships will hold that leave has not been properly given. Thus where the order for the certificate was "Let certificate issue, that the case is fit one for appeal to Her Majesty in Council," but the certificate stated "The Court, having had before it an

of the case it fulfils the requirements of sect 596 (Act XIV of 1882) " held that the leave was granted without jurisdiction. Valuation is an essential part of the requirements under that section, and when the valuation of the case is below the amount mentioned in that section, leave cannot be granted under that section. An erroneous certificate to the effect that the case fulfils the requirements of sect 110 is ineffectual even if assented to by the respondent. In cases below Rs 10,000, there must be a special certificate that the case is sect 110), but the order on it was ' Let a certificate be granted that this is a fit case for appeal to His Majesty in Council and let the usual notices be issued held by the Privy Council that the leave was given pursuant to sect 595 (c) (now sect 109 (c)) and the latter alternative of sect 600 (now r 3) and was properly given (4). When the petition for leave stated "the appeal involved some substantial questions of law and the case fulfilled the requirements of sect 596 and was a fit case for appeal to His Majesty in Council" and the order was "we think on the whole that this is a case in which a certificate for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council ought to be granted" held that the certificate was properly given (5). But where the certificate was "certified that the above case fulfils the requirements of sect 596 (now sect 110) as regards value and nature inasmuch as the value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance was upwards of Rs 10 000 and the value of the matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty's Privy Council also exceeds that amount

a substantial question of law the order allowing leave to appeal was granted but the report was withheld for a certificate that the appeal involved a substantial question of law (1) where the order allowing leave to appeal stated "There seems to be a point of law, which, however, does not appear to have been argued here" it was held by the Privy Council that the leave was granted contrary to the provisions of the Code (2)

The Calcutta High Court has treated the rule as applicable to cases where special leave has been granted by the Privy Council (3)

Date of the decree—It has been held that within the meaning of this rule the date of the decree is the date on which it is pronounced not that on which it is signed (4)

"Furnish security"—Under r 7 the party to whom a certificate has been granted is bound to furnish security within six weeks from the date of such certificate. If he fails to do so, and also fails to satisfy the Judge in the Privy Council Department that there were sufficient reasons for extending the time in his favour, then it cannot be declared that the appeal has been admitted under r 8 and the application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council will be struck off the file (5). A Hindu widow's interest in her husband's property should it was held, not be taken as security for the purposes mentioned (6). Notwithstanding the admission of the appeal under r 8 a surety is not precluded from disputing the validity of the security bond in execution proceedings (7). As to revocation of and power to order further security, see rr 9-11, post and as to increase of security, r 14.

Deposit of amount of estimate—The petitioner for leave to appeal has no right after getting the estimate from the officer of the Court to change it from an estimate for translating, printing and transmitting to an estimate for translating, transcribing and transmitting. If he is dissatisfied with the estimate he can apply to the officer to have the estimate amended or, failing that, he may apply to the Court to direct it to be amended. He has no right to amend the estimate himself, still less has he any right to amend the estimate in the way in which he thinks fit to amend it. If he does not deposit the amount mentioned in the estimate of costs by the officer of the Court within the prescribed time, his application for leave will be stayed (8). As to refund of amount deposited see r 12, post.

Extension of time.—The High Court may extend the time allowed for giving the security and making the deposit required as the words in the section relating to the giving of security are directory only but not to be departed from without cogent reason (1). The "cogent reasons" referred to by the Privy Council must be such, according to the decisions of the Madras High Court, as would lead the Court to believe that the party was diligent in due time to be prepared to lodge the deposit within the limited period and that he was prevented from making his deposit, not owing to absence or difficulty of getting funds, but owing to some circumstances accidental or otherwise over which he had no control, or owing to mistake which the Court would consider not unreasonable or caused by negligence. But J., considered that absence of funds or difficulty in raising the same if true was a very cogent reason for granting an application for extending the time but that the decisions cited bound him (2).

8. Where such security has been furnished and deposit made to the satisfaction of the Court, the admission of appeal and procedure thereon, Court shall—

- (a) declare the appeal admitted,
- (b) give notice thereof to the respondent,
- (c) transmit to His Majesty in Council under the seal of the Court, a correct copy of the said record, except as aforesaid, and
- (d) give to either party one or more authenticated copies of any of the papers in the suit on his applying therefor and paying the reasonable expenses incurred in preparing them

"Declare the appeal admitted"—Until a petition of appeal has been admitted and allowed, a party has no right of appeal and if the petition is allowed to remain on the file of the Court, and is not prosecuted within a reasonable time, the opposite party can apply to have the petition struck off the file, and the Court may order its removal (3).

"Correct copy of the said record"—After the appeal has been allowed could not, it was held, be made before the High Court, but the Judicial Committee might deal with the question when the whole case was before them (1)

For the rule as to transmission of evidence and other documents, see clause 42 of the Charter. The Charters of the High Courts expressly require that the reasons of their decisions should be recorded by the Judges and transmitted for the information of the Privy Council with the records (2). All costs and expenses unnecessarily occasioned by the inclusion in the transcript sent from India of matters improperly introduced therein will be disallowed (3).

All petitions and applications connected with appeals to His Majesty in Council except Mookarnamas should be drawn up in the English language. Security bonds are not made a part of the proceedings transmitted to England, and so need not be drawn up in that language (4). Where an appeal to the Privy Council has been admitted against a regular decree made in appeal, such proceedings as applications for review of the judgment and the order of the Court should not form part of the transcript, and should not be sent to England with the record of the original appeal to the Privy Council (5). Nor will the appellant be allowed to refer to or read as evidence in the appeal to the Privy Council the documents tendered to the Court on the application for the review of judgment as the order refusing such application has not been appealed from (6). Where the Court of first instance framed and decided several issues, and the High Court on appeal confined their decision to the questions which in their opinion governed the case, leaving other issues undecided as not affecting the result of the suit, only so much of the original records as properly bore upon and might be natural for the decisions of the questions of law, decided by the High Court and the subject of the appeal, should, it was held, be printed and transmitted (7).

9. At any time before the admission of the appeal, the Court may, upon cause shown, revoke the acceptance of any such security, and make further directions thereon.

10. Where at any time before the admission of an appeal the power to order further security or payment but before record, in Council, such security appears inadequate, admission of any appeal the decree appealed from shall be unconditionally executed unless the Court otherwise directs

(2) The Court may, if it thinks fit, on special cause shown by any party interested in the suit or otherwise appealing to the Court,—

(a) impound any moveable property in dispute or any part thereof, or

(b) allow the decree appealed from to be executed, taking such security from the respondent as the Court thinks fit for the due performance of any order which His Majesty in Council may make on the appeal, or

(c) stay the execution of the decree appealed from, taking such security from the appellant as the Court thinks fit for the due performance of the decree appealed from, or of any order which His Majesty in Council may make on the appeal or

(d) place any party seeking the assistance of the Court under such conditions or give such other direction respecting the subject-matter of the appeal, as it thinks fit, by the appointment of a Receiver or otherwise

"The grant of a certificate"—It was evident from the express terms of sect 608 of the last Code that the intention of the Legislature was to confer on the High Court the powers therein indicated only in the event of the appeal having been already admitted. The Calcutta High Court accordingly uniformly refused to grant any application under that section before an appeal was finally admitted (1). But the Bombay High Court held that it could order stay of execution of its decree when only the necessary petition for admission had been presented, but that petition had not come before the Court and the appeal had not been declared admitted (2). Under the section as it now stands the application may be made before the appeal is finally admitted under r 8. It was formerly doubted whether the High Court could act under this rule where the appeal had not been certified by itself, but special leave had been granted by the Privy Council (3). But it has now been held by the Privy Council that the High Court has power to stay execution in such a case (4). The Calcutta High Court has held that it has no power to stay proceedings in a suit following a preliminary decree for partition against which it has granted leave to appeal to the Privy Council, and that the latter alone can do so since it has seisin of the appeal (5).

Preservation of property pending appeal—The principle which underlies all orders for the preservation of property pending litigation is that the successful party in the litigation—that is, the ultimately successful party—is to reap the fruits of that litigation and not obtain merely a barren success (6). Property may be thus preserved either by taking possession of it when moveable under clause (a) taking security for its restitution under clause (b) by stay of execution under clause (c), or by making such other order as may be necessary (and as to this the Court is given a complete discretion) under clause (d).

"Taking such security," clause (b)—The object of security being taken from the holder of a decree from which an appeal has been preferred to the Privy Council is to indemnify the appellant for any loss he may suffer owing to the execution being taken out by the decree holder during the pendency of the appeal in the Privy Council. It is therefore only on the execution of the decree that the surety becomes liable. If the decree holder, after applying for execution of the decree, does not take any further steps for execution and the decree remains unexecuted, the terms of the security bond falls to the ground, and the surety cannot in any way be made liable for costs or anything else.

awarded by the High Court (1) The Court may require security although possession of the property in dispute has been already obtained without the giving of security (2) Security to the extent of the whole sum decreed need not always be taken from the decree holder When security is taken for less than the full amount decreed, the decree holder should be restrained from using process of execution with a view to realizing any sum in excess of the amount for which security is given (3) The ordinary practice is that calculation is made for an amount sufficient to meet the mesne profits which are to go to the hands of the decree holder from the date of his obtaining possession to the probable date of the eventual execution of the decree of the Privy Council That period is generally taken to be three years (4) A Hindu widow's interest in her husband's estate has been refused as such security (5) Judges in reporting upon the securities, should state particulars of the documents which have been produced and proved before them and upon which the title of the surety appears to be made out but they need not transmit to the High Court the documents produced before them (6) The High Court under whose directions security has been taken can release a surety, a District Judge has no right to do so (7) A judgment debtor, pending an appeal to the Privy Council, having been ordered by the High Court to furnish security within two months, put in a petition in the District Court on the last day allowed by the order, tendering a dur panti mehal as security and on the following day gave an unregistered security bond which was rejected by the Judge on the grounds that the bond was unregistered and 'there being no guarantee that the property pledged will turn out available Held that the bond offered as security was not required to be registered until the security had been accepted and before rejecting it the Judge should direct an investigation into the sufficiency or otherwise of the property tendered (8) In the case cited it was held that the provisions of the Contract Act relating to revocation of a surety were inapplicable to a person who had stood as a surety under this rule because there was no personal guarantee given by him (9)

application Where, on an application, the High Court made an order "that execution be stayed for three months from this date so as to give the defendants an opportunity to apply to the Privy Council for stay of execution," the Judicial Committee held that the application should have been made to the Court in India, but acting upon the suggestion of the High Court, their Lordships recommended stay of execution on terms (1) The Privy Council stated that they could not stay execution, but where special leave was given they have advised it (2) But where, after the declaration that an appeal has been admitted, an application for stay of execution was rejected (the Judges hearing the application differing in their opinion, and the adverse judgment of the Senior Judge prevailing) on a petition for special leave to appeal, the Judicial Committee, being of opinion that as the two judges in the High Court had differed in opinion, the discretion of the High Court had not in fact been exercised, made an order for stay of execution (3) And where the High Court refused to make an order for want of jurisdiction in an appeal not certified by itself, the Judicial Committee advised the grant of an order of stay (4) The under mentioned case dealt with the procedure to be followed where there was an order of Court to stay the execution of a decree obtained by a party who had appealed to the Privy Council from another decree against himself if the

"Shall apply by petition"—The practice with respect to the decrees of His Majesty in Council is as follows. The original decree is given to the successful party, or to one of the successful parties to the appeal. That is brought to India and it is the duty of the person to whom it is given to file that original decree in the High Court from the decision of which the appeal was preferred and that being done the proper officer of that High Court will be able to give a certified copy or the Registrar of the Judicial Committee will be able to do the same. In this case it was also held that where the party, to file it, a copy, though not certified may. The party then applies by petition accom

"Certified copy"—A mere copy of the printed judgment is not sufficient (2). The provision cannot be construed as restricting the only possible evidence to the certified copy but as directory words with the object of ensuring that proper information upon the subject of any order in Council should be supplied to the Court in India. See last paragraph.

"To the Court from which the appeal to His Majesty was made to the High Court and if proper are invalid (3). If an application it to hold his hands and refer the parties to the High Court (4). It is the duty of the High Court to give directions for executing the decree to the Court of first instance (5).

"Shall transmit."—When a decision of the Judicial Committee has been reported to His Majesty and has been sanctioned and embodied in an order of Council it becomes the decree or order of the final Court of Appeal and it is the duty of every subordinate tribunal to whom the order is addressed to carry it into execution (6). In receiving and filing for the purpose of executing an order of His Majesty in Council made on appeal from an order or decree of the Court of first instance the latter Court does not exercise a discretionary power, but performs a function of a purely ministerial character. the execution of its original decrees (1) The Court which formerly had, but no longer has, territorial jurisdiction ought, when the decree is sent to it, to transfer the decree for execution to the Court which has territorial jurisdiction But the question whether or not the decree ought to be sent direct from the High Court to the Court having territorial jurisdiction was not decided (2) When the Privy Council remits a case to India with directions that the District Court may arrive at certain results by certain inquiries, the objects and reasons of those inquiries, as set forth in the judgment of the Privy Council, are part of the judicial record, and may be forwarded to the District Court with the decree of the Privy Council (3) Where the Privy Council, being doubtful whether the respondents were, on the face of the plaint, entitled by Mahomedan law to the full amount claimed by them left the matter to be determined by the High Court in execution, the latter, being satisfied that the doubt had arisen simply from a slip in the English translation of the plaint, allowed the respondents to take out execution for the whole amount (4) Where a judgment of the Privy Council ordered execution for mesne profits to be taken out first against one particular defendant (J), and only on failure to obtain satisfaction from him against the others held that before the assets of the former (J) had been exhausted, attachment could not issue against the property of the latter even by way of a preliminary and protective step The inquiry whether or not the assets of (J) have been exhausted should be made by calling upon the other defendants to show cause why execution should not issue against them (5)

"In the manner and according to the provisions — thus where pending an appeal to the Privy Council certain property forming part of the subject matter of the suit in which such appeal had been preferred was sold by auction in execution of a money decree against the plaintiff who held the decree of the High Court under appeal and the appeal to the Privy Council was decreed held that the successful appellant was entitled to recover the property sold as mentioned above by an application under the corresponding former section read with sect 241 (now 47) and this right was not affected by the fact that the auction purchasers were not parties to the decree of the Privy Council (6)

costs and interest expressly. But if no provision for interest on the specific sum mentioned, as costs in the Privy Council, is made in the order of the Privy Council, then no interest will be allowed on that sum (1) On the other hand, if the decree of the Privy Council and the decree of the local Court, confirmed by the Privy Council, are silent on the question of interest, no interest will be allowed (2) Where a decree of the Privy Council gives interest, but does not clearly specify the rate, the Court should ascertain if possible, from other parts of the decree itself, or from other documents which may be read in conjunction with the decree, what rate was intended to be given (3) When an appeal to the Privy Council was allowed by the High Court in a suit instituted by a Hindu widow as the guardian of her husband's adopted son, then a minor, but who on attaining majority petitioned for the withdrawal of the appeal, this petition also referred to the Judicial Committee and on the petition of the respondent the appeal was dismissed by the Privy Council, the costs incurred by the widow being ordered to be recouped from the adopted son's estate (4) If a suit is dismissed on a preliminary point in the Court of the first instance, and this decree is confirmed by the Appellate Court in India but set aside by the Privy Council and the case is remanded for the trial of the suit, a refund of the costs which have been taxed and paid under the reversed decrees may be ordered by the Court of first instance, on motion (5) The third and fourth paragraphs of the former section as to the execution of a decree for costs against a surety have been omitted The Legislature by Act VII of 1888 made express provision with regard to matter coming under sects 549, 610 of the former Code by declaring that the liabilities of a surety for costs might be enforced in execution of a decree of the particular Court in the same manner as if he were a party to the appeal, but the Calcutta High Court held that a security bond given by a third party for the due performance of the decree of the Appellate Court under sect 546 of the last Code could not be enforced in execution of that decree (6) The matter is now regulated by sect 145, ante See notes thereto A surety is not precluded from questioning

Mesne profits, interest—It is settled law that where a decree is silent touching interest on mesne profits subsequent to the institution of the suit, the Court executing the decree cannot assess or give execution for such interest or mesne profits.(2)

16. The orders made by the Court which executes the order of His Majesty in Council, relating to such execution, shall be appealable in the same manner and subject to the same rules as the orders of such Court relating to the execution of its own decrees

Appeal—An appeal to the Privy Council will lie as of right from the order of a single Judge of the High Court as to execution of a decree of the Privy Council when the property is over Rs 10,000 (3) Whether or not an order under the rule is a ministerial proceeding, if a judicial discretion is exercised thereunder, it may amount to a "judgment" under sect 15 of the Charter and may be appealable. If in such exercise of judicial discretion a Judge usurps jurisdiction, that alone would be a valid ground of appeal (4)

ORDER XLVI

Reference.

1. Where, before or on the hearing of a suit or an appeal ^{is} in which the decree is not subject to appeal, or ^{Reference of question to High Court} where, in the execution of any such decree, any question of law or usage having the force of law arises, on which the Court trying the suit or appeal, or executing the decree, entertains reasonable doubt, the Court may, either of its own motion or on the application of any of the parties, draw up a statement of the facts of the case and the point on which doubt is entertained, and refer such statement with its own opinion on the point for the decision of the High Court

2. The Court may either stay the proceedings or proceed ^{is} in the case notwithstanding such reference, ^{Court may pass decree contingent upon decision of High Court} and may pass a decree or make an order contingent upon the decision of the High Court on the point referred, but no decree or order made shall be executed in any case in which such reference is made until the receipt of a copy of the judgment of the High Court upon the reference

Reference—Any Judge may make a reference provided the terms of the rule are complied with (1) This rule applies only when doubts arise in the hearing of a suit or appeal or execution or other proceeding. It was not intended to apply to supposititious cases, which do not actually arise in a proper proceeding before the Court (2) It does not authorize a reference except on a point arising in a litigation between parties or in a matter wherein the Court is called on to adjudicate that is to pronounce on the opposite pretensions of contending parties (3) So it has been held not to apply to an application by the alleged trustee of a mosque for permission to grant a lease of lands alleged to belong to the mosque, (1) or to an order fining a pleader (2). The proceeding in which the reference is made must be one in which there may be a decree (3) and in which such decree, when passed, is final (4). For in appealable cases a remedy to correct possible error is provided by the appeal. The question must be one of law, and the Court cannot make a reference on a point merely on the application of the parties unless it entertains a reasonable doubt upon the matter, (5) nor on a point on which a Division Bench of the High Court has expressed an opinion (6). A Judge cannot ordinarily entertain a reasonable doubt on a point clearly decided by the rulings of the High Court of his Presidency, unless the authority of the decision can be questioned by virtue of anything said or decided in the Privy Council (7). In r 1 the words "or the construction of a document which construction may affect the merits" have been omitted as they are sufficiently covered by the power to refer any question of law. The alterations in r 2 are verbal only. It has been held that a Collector hearing an application under sect. 23 of the Bombay Mamlatdar's Court Act, 1906, has no power to make a reference to the High Court, not being a Court trying a suit or appeal or executing a decree (8).

Presidency Small Cause Courts—Sect. 69 of Act XV of 1882 provides for a compulsory reference where the Judges differ in opinion as to any question of law or construction of a document affecting the merits, and also where in suits exceeding Rs. 500 in amount or value, any such question arises upon which the Court entertains reasonable doubt, and either party so requires (9). The provisions of rr. 3-5, so far as they are applicable, are deemed to apply as if such reference had been made under the present rules. It was formerly said (10) not to be an easy matter to make sect. 69 dovetail with the present rules and divergent views (11) were entertained upon the question whether sect 69 was controlled by them. It is now unnecessary to further consider the matter as by Act IV of 1906 the Presidency Small Court Act was amended with a view to remove the difficulties which had been experienced.

3 The High Court, after hearing the parties if they appear and desire to be heard, shall decide the point so referred, and shall transmit a copy of its judgment, under the signature of the Registrar, to the Court by which the reference was made, and such Court shall, on the receipt thereof, proceed to dispose of the case in conformity with the decision of the High Court.

Judgment of High Court to be transmitted and case disposed of accordingly

"After hearing the parties"—The rule has here been altered as the language of the former section might if strictly interpreted require a hearing of the parties even though they had not appeared.

"Dispose of the case"—The word "case" in the last part of the rule refers to "the case" in the first part showing that what is intended is the suit and not the subject of the reference (1). Where the Small Cause Court passed a decree for the plaintiffs, but contingent on the opinion of the High Court and on the reference the latter decided that upon the plaint before the Court the plaintiffs could not recover it was held that the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to allow the suit to be withdrawn but on receipt of the copy of the judgment of the High Court was bound to enter judgment for the defendants. Had the case been referred in an intermediate stage the final judgment being withheld until the decision on the point referred to the High Court the Small Cause Court would then have been in possession of the case but having pronounced judgment contingent upon the opinion of the High Court which opinion was against that judgment there was only one course to take (2).

Review—The judgment passed by the High Court is not a decree or order within clause (b) of O XLVII r 1 but simply a statement of the grounds in conformity with which the Subordinate Judge is to dispose of the case as provided by this rule (3). A review is expressly given by that order and rule in the case of a judgment on a reference from a Court of Small Causes but not one from a Subordinate Judge exercising the powers of a Small Cause Court (4).

4 The costs (if any) consequent on a reference for the decision of the High Court shall be costs in the case.

Costs of reference to High Court

Costs—Costs "in the case" means costs of the suit or appeal as in r 1 this rule being the one under which the costs are dealt with and the costs being made costs in this case (1) Under this rule the costs of a reference cannot be dealt with separately, but must be dealt with when awarding the costs of the suit. They are, however, in the discretion of the Court, and need not necessarily follow the event of the suit (2)

- 1] 5. Where a case is referred to the High Court under rule 1, the High Court may return the case for amendment, and may alter, cancel or set aside any decree or order which the Court making the reference has passed or made in the case out of which the reference arose, and make such order as it thinks fit

"Amendment"—The case may be returned for amendment, as in the decision noted below (3)

- 6 (1) Where at any time before judgment a Court in which a suit has been instituted doubts whether the suit is cognizable by a Court of Small Causes or is not so cognizable, it may submit the record to the High Court with a statement of its reasons for the doubt as to the nature of the suit

(2) On receiving the record and statement, the High Court may order the Court either to proceed with the suit or to return the plaint for presentation to such other Court as it may in its order declare to be competent to take cognizance of the suit

7. (1) Where it appears to a District Court that a Court subordinate thereto has, by reason of erroneously holding a suit to be cognizable by a Court of Small Causes or not to be so cognizable, failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law, or exercised a jurisdiction not so vested, the District Court may, and if required by a party shall, submit the record to the High Court with a statement of its reasons for considering the opinion of the subordinate Court with respect to the nature of the suit to be erroneous

(2) On receiving the record and statement the High Court may make such order in the case as it thinks fit

High Court may make such order as in the circumstances appears to it to be just and proper

(4) A Court subordinate to a District Court shall comply with any requisition which the District Court may make for any record or information for the purposes of this rule

Power to refer—Act VII of 1888 sect 60 Rule 6 applies only to a case before judgment (1)

Submission for revision—It has been held by the Madras (2) and Calcutta (3) High Courts that the Judge is bound to make a reference if one of the parties requires him to do so. The Allahabad Court has however held that the word "shall" in the former section was not mandatory but directory, and that before a District Court could make a reference under it it must be of opinion that the Subordinate Court has erroneously held upon the point of jurisdiction in regard to the particular suit before it and that therefore the matter was one in which the interference of the High Court should be sought (4). When a reference is made to the High Court under r 7 the Court which makes it should state its reasons for considering the opinion of the Subordinate Court with respect to the nature of the suit to be erroneous (5). Notwithstanding sect 16 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act the High Court has on a case being submitted to it under this rule full power to consider the matter of jurisdiction or to deal with it on the merits so as to do substantial justice without putting the parties to the expense of a fresh trial. Where a suit cognizable by a Small Cause Court was tried both in the Munsif's and District Judge's Court without objection to the jurisdiction held on a second appeal to the High Court that the former section must be read with sect 19 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act so as to modify its full effect in a case wrongly tried by an ordinary Civil Court and taken in appeal to the District Court both parties having submitted to the jurisdiction it was not competent to either of them on second appeal to plead the want of jurisdiction so as to render the proceedings taken in the suit void (6). In a suit for damages on account of use and occupation of land brought in a Court of Small Causes exception was taken to the plaintiff's title. The plaint was returned by the Judge under sect 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887) for presentation in the ordinary Civil Court and it having been presented to the Munsif, who tried the suit and passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff. On appeal the Subordinate Judge reversed that decree holding that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to try the suit. Held that under sect 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act the order of the Small Cause Court Judge was regularly made and the Munsif had therefore jurisdiction to entertain the plaint. See Ule

(2) Singh v. McMaister 13 M 311 (1890) and the fact that an appeal lay to the District Judge from the order made by the District Munsif did not preclude him from making the reference. Id., at p. 316

(5) Chhotu v. Jawahir 25 A 293 (1894)

(6) Suresh Chunder v. Krishna Parani 21 C. 249 (1893)

It is doubtful whether the Appellate Court would have been right in dismissing the suit for want of jurisdiction, even supposing that the order made under sect 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act had not expressly conferred jurisdiction upon the Munsif (1) This rule does not apply to every case in which a Court of Small Causes has failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law, or has exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, but only to a restricted number of such cases namely, those cases in which a Court of Small Causes has erroneously held a suit to be, or not to be, cognizable by it Where no question as to the Court's jurisdiction was raised by either party, and the Court of Small Causes proceeded to judgment as if the case was properly cognizable by it, the High Court refused to interfere upon a reference made by the District Judge purporting to be made under the former section (2) The rule is an enabling one, and does not cut down the jurisdiction of the appellate tribunal (3)

ORDER XLVII.

Review.

1. (1) Any person considering himself aggrieved—

Application for review of judgment.

(a) by a decree or order from which an appeal is allowed, but from which no appeal has been preferred,

(b) by a decree or order from which no appeal is hereby allowed, or

(c) by a decision on a reference from a Court of Small

and who, from the discovery of new and important matter or evidence which, after the exercise of due diligence, was not within his knowledge or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree was passed or order made, or on account of some mistake or error apparent on the face of the record, or for any other sufficient reason, desires to obtain a review of the decree passed or order made against him, may apply for a review of judgment to the Court which passed the decree or made the order.

(2) A party who is not appealing from a decree or order may apply for a review of judgment notwithstanding the pendency of an appeal by some other party except where the ground of such appeal is common to the applicant and the appellant, or when, being respondent, he can present to the Appellate Court the case on which he applies for the review.

Application for review of judgment—This rule corresponds with sect 376 of Act VIII of 1859. That section was modified by sect 623 of Act X of 1877, by which Act the sub clauses (a) (b), and (c) were substituted for “by a decree of a Court of original jurisdiction from which no appeal shall have been preferred to a Supreme Court, or by a decree of a District Court in appeal from which no appeal shall have been admitted by the Sudder Court or by a decree of the Sudder Court from which either no appeal may have been preferred to Her Majesty in Council, or an appeal having been preferred no proceedings in the suit have been transmitted to Her Majesty in Council,” the words and important “after the exercise of due diligence,” “or order made or on account of some mistake or error apparent on the face of the record,” “or order made” and the second clause were

r 13) (1) When an appeal has been dismissed under sect 501 (now O 47 r 1) the Lower Court has no jurisdiction to review its judgment or decree that decree having merged in the decree of the Appellate Court (2) The Code of 1859 only referred to review of decrees but where a Judge had reviewed an order passed confirming a sale in execution of a decree the Privy Council did not treat that review as a nullity but dealt with the case on its merits (3)

Clause (a) —The admission of a special appeal debarred a review even though the person applying did not prefer the appeal (4) likewise if the special appeal has been tried and disposed of (5) In such a case the Lower Court could not review so as to modify the substance of its decree but it might for the purpose of correcting a clerical error, (6) but if a review be applied for in proper time and before an appeal has been preferred the Judge was held not prevented from proceeding upon the application for review by the subsequent presentation of an application to appeal to the Privy Council and he had full power and was bound to proceed under the application for review (7) but in that case the application for leave to appeal had not been granted and the Madras High Court formerly held that the preferring of an appeal subsequent to the application for review stays the review proceedings (8) But the Allahabad High Court apparently hold a contrary opinion for there an order passed on review purporting merely to amend the original decree was held to amount to a new decree superseding the original decree and an appeal filed pending review could not be heard as the decree under appeal had ceased to exist (9) A Full Bench of the Madras High Court has now held that the review proceedings are not stayed by the preferring of an appeal (10) An applicant may withdraw his appeal and apply for a review (11) as by the cancellation of the order for admission of the appeal it may be taken that no appeal had been admitted and if refused it is not where the appeal instead of being withdrawn is actually dismissed (12)

Clause (c) —This does not include a judgment on a reference from a Subordinate Court (13) The Madras

High Court has held that sect 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Court Act is merely directory and not mandatory, (1) but the Calcutta High Court has held the contrary (2)

"Discovery of new and important matter or evidence — Though review is allowed on this ground the Privy Council have recently pointed out that the Code exacts strict conditions so as to prevent litigants lying on their oars when they ought to be looking for evidence (3) It must be shown that it is prima facie evidence in the cause (4) The new evidence must be clear and conclusive (5) It need not be sufficient per se to show that the previous decision was wrong or be such as to cause an overpowering balance of evidence in favour of the applicant (6) But the discovery of evidence not originally available tending to prove that a decree had been obtained by perjury is ground for an application for review (7) A judgment on special appeal cannot be reviewed merely on the ground that new evidence to prove a fact had been discovered (8) inasmuch as it would have been inadmissible to impeach the decree on the hearing of the special appeal itself (9) though it might be good ground for an application for review to the Lower Court (10)

There has been a conflict of decisions as to whether a new and authoritative exposition of the law is or is not new and important matter justifying the granting of a review. On the one hand it has been held that the publication of a decision subsequent to the case sought to be reviewed being decided was ground for a review (11) that where a review was sought on the strength of a Full Bench decision it should have been made within ninety days of that decision (12) and that where a review had been properly granted the case should be governed by any new exposition of the law laid down since the date of the original decision (13) also that the decision of the Privy Council in an appeal is new and important matter for the purposes of an application for review in respect of a decree made on a subsequent accrual of the same cause of action as that on which the decree appealed against was based (14) On the other hand it has been held that a subsequent Full Bench case overruling the authority on which the judgment sought to be reviewed had been based (1) or the discovery of a fresh authority, (2) were not grounds for granting an application for review. In the last cited case it was, however, held that when a Court is satisfied that its judgment had proceeded upon an erroneous view of the law this rule allows a review. A new exposition of the law is, however, not a just and reasonable cause for not having applied for a review within the time prescribed for such application (3).

"After the exercise of due diligence"—This is the effect of the decisions in the cases cited (4) in the second of which it was held that although the petitioner stated he did not know of the existence of the evidence at the time the suit was tried it by no means followed that he ought not to have known of it and that if he had made due search he might not have discovered it.

"Could not be produced"—This must be proved to the satisfaction of the Court before it grants an application for review, (5) but an application for review having been admitted on other grounds fresh evidence may be received though no reason has been assigned for its non production at the original trial (6).

"At the time when the decree was passed"—This rule does not authorize the review of a decree which was right when made on the ground of the happening of some subsequent event (7).

"Mistake or error"—If the mistake or error is on the face of the judgment or if it is shown that the decision has proceeded upon a mistaken view of the law (8) or if the error be on the face of the record (9) or on the face of the judgment or the decree it is clear that it is irregular and incorrect or not in compliance with the provisions of the law, a review lies (10). The absence of a formal finding on an issue tried and decided by a High Court is not an error calling for review of judgment (11).

"Any other sufficient reason."—Whilst an error on a point of law is a ground for review, (12) the reason is not confined to either positive error in law or new evidence to be brought forward which could not be produced on the first hearing (1) And the cases do not limit the discretion of the Court in saying what reason is good and sufficient or what may be so far requisite to the ends of justice as to support an application for review (2) The Court must decide this in each case on its own circumstances The reason must be one sufficient to the Court before which the application for review is made It may depend upon a question of law or upon a question of fact or of mixed law and fact It is not limited only to the cases in which the right to review is extended in England (3) It cannot moreover, be treated as an universal rule that no point can be raised on an application for review which has already been discussed and decided on the original hearing or that no new point which was not raised on the hearing can be argued on the application for review In each case the Court must consider and decide whether a review is necessary to correct any evident error or omission or is otherwise requisite for the ends of justice (4) The following cases therefore are cited as instances only of the exercise of the power, which however is not limited to such cases Where a Court wrongly excluded material evidence (5) or refused to admit additional evidence on appeal, (6) or the parties and the Judge were under a misapprehension as to the contents of a document or the Judge alone was misled on the point, (7) or the Judge in deciding the case omitted to consider the effect of important documentary evidence filed with the plaint which was not taken issue upon and which materially affected the merits of the case (8) or the question of limitation (9) or discredited material documentary evidence without inspecting it or declared the report of a Commissioner unworthy of reliance because he was a muharrir (10) or omitted to try a point which was urged before him (11) by mistake, (12) or had placed the onus of proof on the wrong party (13) it was held that there was sufficient ground for granting a review As also in the case of omission to serve the respondent with notice of appeal and his consequent absence at the hearing (14) or the dismissal of a suit for non joinder of parties necessary under sect 8, of the Transfer of Property Act, (15) or the dismissal on the technical ground that the stamp was originally insufficient but which was subsequently found to have been sufficient, (16) or where the point was raised for the first time in delivering judgment, (1) or the Judge had made an error in calculation, (2) or had based his decision on a decree which was subsequently set aside on appeal (3) The production of an authority, which ought to have been but which was not cited at the first hearing laying down a view of the law contrary to that taken by the Judge, is sufficient ground (4) though formerly it was held otherwise (5) So where the Privy Council had given an authoritative exposition at variance with the decision of the High Court on which the decree sought to be reviewed had been based a review was allowed (6)

A decree against a minor properly represented in the suit cannot be reopened on review by the minor on attaining majority, on the ground that the decree did not reserve an opportunity to him to show cause against it on attaining majority, (7) but otherwise where the Court passing the decree in terms of a compromise against a minor did not inquire into the circumstances which led to the filing of the petition of compromise nor granted any leave to compromise under sect 462 (now O XXXII r 7) (8) Where, however he seeks to set aside a decree on the ground that the compromise made by his guardian and on which the decree was based was fraudulent, his remedy was formerly held to be by suit and not by way of review (9) But by a later decision it was held that fraud practised upon a party in connection with a petition of compromise was a good ground for reviewing the decree made thereon (10) A mistake in copying out a petition of compromise may not itself be a good ground for review but coupled with an allegation of fraud it is (11)

A review has been refused to be allowed on the ground that if the facts had been better or more fully placed before the Court the decision would have been different (12) even coupled with the fact that there was a subsequent decision of the Privy Council on the point the petition being seven years after the decision sought to be reviewed, (13) or merely to supply defects on the part of pleaders in their conduct of appeals, (14) or to enable the Court to reconsider its judgment on the same evidence, (15) or on the ground that the Court improperly neglected to examine a witness, if the objection was not taken when the case was heard by the Court of Appeal, (16) or that the Court's decision is contrary to the weight of evidence (1) The Privy Council has, however, held that the decision in the last mentioned case does not limit the discretion of the Court in saying what reason is good and sufficient or what may be so far requisite to the ends of justice as to support an application for review (2) That the Appeal Court's decision was based on a ground first raised in appeal was held no reason for granting a review (3) And grounds which virtually disclose reasons for an appeal from a decision cannot, it has been said be the bases of a review (4) It has also been held that a point raised on appeal but abandoned in argument cannot ordinarily be a ground for review, (5) and that the fact that one Divisional Bench of the High Court has decided a point at variance with the decision of another Divisional Bench is not such a ground (6)

"May apply"—The proceedings taken to obtain a review pass through three stages In the first place the party applies for a rule, which application is either granted or rejected This is the first stage If the rule is granted the other side shows cause, upon which the rule is made absolute or discharged This is the second stage The last stage is where if the rule is made absolute, the case is directed to be reheard, and an order or decree passed upon such hearing The application should if possible be to the Judge who passed the decree or order sought to be reviewed, or as the Privy Council has put it — "We do not say that there might not be cases in which a review might take place before another and a different Judge, because death or some other unexpected or unavoidable cause might prevent the Judge who made the decision from reviewing it, but we do say that such exceptions are allowable only ex necessitate We do say that in all practicable cases the same Judge ought to review" (7) Expedition in presenting a petition for review is indispensable (8) A party applying must show that there is good and sufficient cause for granting the review before he can be heard to argue that the decision is erroneous (9) There may be exceptional circumstances which will warrant the Judicial Committee in allowing even after an order of His Majesty in Council has issued upon their report, a rehearing at the instance of one of the parties, but this is an indulgence with a view mainly to prevent irremediable injustice when by some accident, without any blame, the party has not been heard, and an order has been made inadvertently, as if he had been heard (10) An application for review is the proper method of setting aside a decree made on a compromise (11) As to whether a second application can be made for review, see r 9, post

"Review of judgment."—"Review of judgment" and "review of decree" are used interchangeably in sect 114 and in O XLVII rr 1 and 2 (1) Where on an application for review on several points the Judge allowed it on only one point which might have been dealt with under sect 206 (now 152) it was held still to be an application for review, (2) and an order for amendment of a decree under that section is an order passed upon review of judgment within the meaning of Art 179, Schedule II clause (5) of the Limitation Act (3) As a general principle no review can be admitted of a judgment passed on a compromise, (4) though where it is necessary to set aside a decree made upon a compromise, the proper course is by way of review (5) The expression "review of judgment" has been held to include an amendment of decree that does not necessitate any alteration in the judgment (6)

Practice—An application for review commences ordinarily with an ex parte application under this rule. The Court may then either reject the application at once, or may grant a rule calling on the other side to show cause why the review should not be granted. In the second stage, the application may either be admitted or rejected, and it is obvious that the hearing of this rule may involve to some extent an investigation into the merits. If the rule is discharged the case ends. If, on the other hand, the rule is made absolute, then the third stage is reached, the case is re heard on the merits and may result in a repetition of the former decree or in some variation of it. Though in one aspect the result is the same whether the rule is discharged or on the re hearing the original decree be repeated, in law there is a material difference, for, in the latter case, the whole matter having been re opened, there is a fresh decree. In the former case the parties are relegated to, and still rest on the old decree (7) In practice, however, these three stages are not always kept distinct, but are sometimes combined (8) The Allahabad High Court has held that it is not necessary that an application for review should be accompanied by a copy of the decree, order, or judgment sought to be reviewed (9) It has been held that the Code does not contemplate that the Court on being satisfied of the existence of good grounds for review should (instead of making an order admitting the review) admit the new evidence and hear the case, not on the merits but as to admissibility of review on the basis of such evidence taken with other evidence in the case and finally reject the review on the ground that the new evidence so taken did not assist the applicant (1)

"Party who is not appealing may apply"—This is the effect of the decision in the case cited (2)

Appeal—An appeal lies in certain cases from an order granting a review (3) But it does not lie from an order rejecting an application for review. The proper procedure where that is open is to appeal from the order sought to be reviewed (4) No appeal lies from an order on review amending a sale certificate (5) or of an order dismissing an execution case for non payment of process fees (6) Where a decree holder made an application under sect 108 (now O IX r 13) to set aside an adjustment of decree and on its being refused applied that the application be treated as one for review and on its refusal appealed against the order under sect 108 and also took the ground that the review should have been allowed the Appeal Court refusing to interfere with the order under sect 108 could not it was held remand the case in regard to the application for review (7) See r 7, post

Limitation—Under the Code of 1859 the period of limitation was ninety days as prescribed by sect 377 of that Code. Now it is governed by the Limitation Act IX of 1908 Sched I, Arts 161 162 and 173. The pendency of a special appeal is not 'a just and reasonable cause' for extending the time for the admission of an application for review (8) Where there were a number of pro forma defendants and the decree was against "the defendant" it was held that the application for review must be made within three years after the decree is made for review in calculating the limitation on appeals there was a diversity of opinion in the case cited (10) Rampu J holding that the general rule for extending the time to prefer an appeal and for excluding the time taken up in prosecuting an application for review is that the delay may be excused if the applicant can show that he had reasonable grounds for applying for a review instead of preferring an appeal, and Mookerjee J holding that the general rule deducible from judicial decisions is that a bona fide application for review presented and prosecuted with due diligence should except in special cases be regarded as a sufficient cause for not presenting an appeal within the prescribed period

Court fees—On an application to review the portion of a decision relating to costs only, the applicant must pay stamp duty on the entire claim of the

2 An application for review of a decree or order of a Court, not being a High Court, upon some ground other than the discovery of such new and important matter or evidence as is referred to in rule 1 or the existence of a clerical or arithmetical mistake or error apparent on the face of the decree, shall be made only to the Judge who passed the decree or made the order sought to be reviewed, but any such application may, if the Judge who passed the decree or made the order has ordered notice to issue under rule 4, sub rule (2), proviso (a), be disposed of by his successor

To whom applications for review may be made—This rule combines sect 624 of Act X of 1837 and the last clause added to sect 626 of Act XIV of 1882 by Act VII of 1888 The wording has been changed and the rule has been framed to include orders as well as decrees the words or the existence of a have been substituted for “same” and the word arithmetical mistake added

‘Upon some ground other than—This does not include supposed

ing majority applied to set aside a decree made on a compromise when a minority on the ground that the Court did not inquire into the circumstances which led to the filing of the petition of compromise and that the record showed no leave to compromise had been granted under sect 462 (now O XXXII r 7) it was held that the successor to the Subordinate Judge who heard the original case was competent to entertain the application for review (6)

“New and important matter”—A decision of the Privy Council in an appeal has been held to be new and important matter for the purposes of an application for review in respect of a decree made on a subsequent accrual of the same cause of action as that on which the decree appealed against was based (7) See also notes to r 1

"Shall be made"—The remarks of the Privy Council in regard to expedition in presenting applications for review should be borne in mind. Their Lordships said, "We do not say that there might not be cases in which a review might take place before another and a different Judge, because death or some other unexpected and unavoidable cause might prevent the Judge who made the decision from reviewing it, but we do say that such exceptions are allowable only ex necessitate. We do say that in all practicable cases the same Judge ought to review, and that for the attainment of that object expedition in presenting a petition for the review is indispensable, and the only practical course for attaining that end is by accelerating the hearing of the review before accident or unexpected events shall have removed the original Judge" (1).

"Made"—Where a petition for review of judgment is presented to the Judge who delivered it and he directs notices to issue thereon (2) or directs the application to be entered on the register and that the fees for service of notice be deposited, and is then transferred, his successor has jurisdiction to make the order sought to be revised (3). In such cases the grounds for review are not confined to those mentioned in this rule. But it would be otherwise where the Judge to whom the petition was presented merely ordered a copy of the decree to be produced and did not issue notice (4). The Allahabad High Court, however, have construed 'made' to include a hearing and determination of the application for review (5). This variance of opinion has been set at rest by the concluding clause of this rule which has affirmed the decisions of the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay.

"Only to the Judge"—The primary intention of granting a review is a reconsideration of the same subject by the same Judge as distinguished from an appeal, which is a hearing before another tribunal (6). If a Court has been abolished and its business transferred to another Court presided over by another Judge, the latter cannot entertain an application for review except in the cases mentioned in this rule, (7) nor can a Judge by transferring a case to his own file confer on himself the power to review an order of dismissal pronounced by a Judge subordinate to him (8). A Judge of a Mofussil Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to review a case tried by his predecessor subject to the provisions of this rule (9).

3 The provisions as to the form of preferring appeals shall apply

Form of applications for review—This rule corresponds with sect 625 in the Codes of 1877 and 1882, save that "provisions" has been substituted for "rules heretofore contained" and "preferring" for "making". Applications for review should be drawn up in the same manner as applications for the admission of special appeals, and should set forth concisely the grounds of objection to the decision sought to be reviewed (1) The Bombay High Court has held that the petition for review must be accompanied by a copy of the decree sought to be reviewed, (2) but the Allahabad High Court has held the contrary (3) If the grounds of review are certified they should be certified by the pleader who appeared originally in the appeal (4) In granting a review the Court should not travel beyond the grounds mentioned in the application for review (5) and "grant the same" for "grant the review" Proviso (b) was added by the Code of 1877 The present Code has substituted "where" for "if" and added the words "or order" and "or made" appearing in italics, but has omitted the words "and the Judge shall record with his own hand his reasons for such opinion" before the first proviso (1) Clause (c) of the former section has been embodied in r 2 ante The form of Notice is given in the First Schedule Appendix G, No 14

This rule applies to orders rejecting or admitting reviews and not to judgments on review (2) A decree of a Division Bench of the High Court dismissing an appeal for default in depositing the estimated costs of preparation of the paper book can only be set aside by an order under this rule (3)

An application for review involves three stages It commences ordinarily with an ex parte application under sect 523 (now O XLVII r 1) The Court then may either reject the application at once, or may grant a rule calling on the other side to show cause why the review should not be granted In the second stage the application may either be admitted or rejected, and it is obvious that the hearing of the rule may involve to some extent, an investigation into the merits If the rule is discharged, then the case ends If, on the other hand, the rule is made absolute, then the third stage is reached, the case is heard on the merits, and may result in a repetition of the former decree or in some variation of it Though in one aspect the result is the same whether the rule is discharged or on the re-hearing the original decree be repeated in law there is a material difference, for in the latter case the whole matter having been re-opened there is a fresh decree In the former case the parties are relegated to and still rest on the old decree (4) In practice these three stages are not always kept distinct but are sometimes combined (5)

"Shall reject the application"—Such rejection cannot alter the judgment sought to be reviewed or the decree founded upon it and nothing which the Judge says with reference to his refusal to grant the review can be binding so as to alter such judgment or decree (6) Where on special appeal the case was remanded for trial of a particular issue and an application for review was made in order that the suit might be remanded for the trial of another issue, it was held that as that would involve going through the record again the application could not be granted as it would in fact be to grant a second special appeal (7)

"Shall grant the same"—Under the Code of 1859 which provided that where an application for review was beyond the prescribed time a Judge should record his reasons for admitting it such proceeding and the order

admitting the review could be made in one and the same proceeding (1) An order intended to operate as an order for review is not invalidated by an irregularity in its form by reasons of which it purports to be an order made on an application to set aside the decree and restore a suit for trial (2) The order made under this rule is not one on the re-hearing of the case on review, that comes later (3) Although a District or Assistant Judge or Special Judge under sect 74 of the Dikhan Agriculturists Relief Act is not governed by this Code, he has discretion to grant a review on the ground of mistake, (4) or non service of notice, (5) and he may review an ex parte order, (6) but notice of the application must be served on the other side (7) The Codes of 1877 and 1882 required the Judge granting an application for review to record with his own hand his reasons for his opinion, and it was held that this should be done before the review of judgment was granted (8) The failure to do so did not necessarily make the act one without jurisdiction, (9) but such an order was bad and the case must be remanded (10) This was not a hard and fast rule, the words were directory, and the order was not necessarily invalid though there might be cases in which it was necessary in the interests of justice that the reasons should be recorded, and in such cases the recording would be essential to the validity of the order (11) In granting a review the Court should not travel beyond the grounds mentioned in the application for review (12)

Clause (a) — Notice must be served on the opposite party to appear before a suit can be revived, (13) but not in the case of a review of an application for the admission of a special appeal, as such application being ex parte, a review of the same is also ex parte (14) In the Codes of 1877 and 1882 this clause only made mention of decrees and not orders. The omission has been rectified by the present rule

Clause (b) — Lord Russell, M R, said, "Re hearing a cause upon obtaining fresh evidence is a most dangerous practice. It is the duty of suitors to bring forward all their evidence at the first, and nothing would be more mischievous than to allow the principle to prevail, that a person should endeavour to get a case heard upon imperfect evidence, and trust to succeeding on that evidence, and then, when it is found that he has not succeeded, to bring forward further evidence" (15) When a Judge wrongly construed a document, an application for the purpose of correcting the error on review accompanied by another similar document to assist the Court was held not to be an application coming within this rule (1) When the new evidence with anything like diligence, have be review was refused, (2) but where the for review certain documents to show that the Judge's decision was erroneous on the evidence originally before him, it was held that he was not in fault in not producing them previously, as they were not originally necessary to the proof of his claim (3) The applicant must also show that the new evidence is prima facie evidence in the cause (4)

"Strict proof"—The Privy Council have recently emphasized this condition (5) Want of such proof is a ground of appeal, (6) and the decision on review must be reversed, (7) but where a party had no opportunity of giving such proof owing to the opposite party, who had notice, not appearing and making no objection, the opposite party cannot afterwards be allowed to object (8) Strict proof means proof according to the forms of law, that is, with close adherence to rule (9) It is not sufficient to make an affidavit that the applicant was not aware of the existence of a document, but he must also show that he used due diligence and made inquiries to ascertain its existence and found it was not available, (10) but an applicant for review on the ground that he had not been afforded sufficient time to produce a document at the original hearing has not to prove the document was not within his knowledge (11) to which the application refers, such Judge or Judges or any of them shall hear the application, and, no other Judge or Judges of the Court shall hear the same.

Applications for review in Courts consisting of two or more Judges—This rule is a modified form of sect 379 of Act VII of 1859. That section commenced "If the Court to which the application for a review of its judgment has been presented be a Court consisting of two or more judges whenever the judge or judges who may have passed the decree or if the decree have been passed by two or more judges, when any of such judges shall" By sect 627 of Act X of 1877 these words were altered to the form the rule now takes save for the words in italics, down to the words "continues or" That Act also substituted "is not or are not" for "shall not be" "conveys no decree or order" for "is not" from same "upon a consideration of the merits of the application and record an order or opinion thereon" The present Code substituted "Where for" "If" and added the words "made the" appearing in italics. An application for the re-admission of an appeal dismissed by two Judges for default in depositing the estimated amount of costs for the preparation of the paper book was held not an application for review, and could not be disposed of by one of such Judges under this rule, (1) but a later decision, of the Full Bench has overruled that decision so far as it held it was not an application for review, (2) and presumably therefore the rest of that decision is not law.

"Attached to the Court"—A Judge absent on leave and for whom another is officiating is not "attached to the Court" and the review may be disposed of by the remaining Judge who heard the appeal originally (3)

"No other Judge shall hear the same"—A review may be admitted by the sole remaining Judge of the Bench which heard the case originally (4) If it be admitted by the two Judges who originally heard the case it may be disposed of by the sole remaining Judge. The Chief Justice cannot appoint a Bench to do so (5)

"Application where rejected."—This rule was introduced into the Code by sect. 628 of Act X. of 1877. By the present Code the word "Where" has been substituted for "If" and "is" for "be."

7. (1) An order of the Court rejecting the application shall not be appealable; but an order granting an application may be objected to on the ground that the application was—

Order of rejection not appealable. Objections to order granting application

(a) in contravention of the provisions of rule 2,

(b) in contravention of the provisions of rule 4, or

(c) after the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed therefor and without sufficient cause.

Such objection may be taken at once by an appeal from the order granting the application or in any appeal from the final decree or order passed or made in the suit.

(2) Where the application has been rejected in consequence of the failure of the applicant to appear, he may apply for an order to have the rejected application restored to the file, and, where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when such application was called on for hearing, the Court shall order it to be restored to the file upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit, and shall appoint a day for hearing the same.

(3) No order shall be made under sub-rule (2) unless notice of the application has been served on the opposite party.

Order of rejection not appealable objections to order granting application.—This was introduced by sect 629 of Act X of 1877. The words "An order of the Court rejecting the application shall be final" (the form they then took) were taken from sect 378 of Act VIII of 1859. That section also provided that an order granting the review should be final. This provision was repealed by sect 629 of Act X. of 1877. The present rule corresponds with that section, save that the words "not be appealable" have been substituted for "be final," and "the application" for "it," "taken" for "made," "from" for "against," and "where it is" for "if it be," the words "passed or" added, the wording of sub-rule (3) rearranged, and the last clause of the former section, which now forms the basis of O XLVII r 9, omitted.

"Shall not be appealable."—The wording used in the earlier Codes was "shall be final" and was held to preclude appeal (1). That decision was in reference to the wording as it appeared in sect 378 of the Code of 1859, but the word "final" in the late Code has been similarly interpreted (1) No appeal lies, even if the application be rejected by a single Judge on the Original Side of the High Court, (2) or if the application be for the review of an order dismissing an execution for non payment of process fees (3) An opinion was expressed under the last Code that an order of rejection was not open to revision (4) It must, however, be now noted that the order is not now "final" but "not appealable" The effect of an order rejecting an application for review is not to alter the judgment sought to be reviewed or the decree founded upon it, and nothing which the Judge says with reference to his refusal to grant the review can be binding so as to alter such judgment or decree (5) When an order is made rejecting a review, the time allowed for appeal to the Privy Council against the judgment sought to be reviewed runs from the date of the judgment and not that of the order rejecting the review (6)

"May be objected to"—The appeal may be on the grounds mentioned in this rule and on no other (7) An order admitting a review is not a judgment within the meaning of sect 15 of the Letters Patent so as to admit of an appeal from it save on the grounds mentioned in this rule, (8) but it may be dealt with under sect 622 (now sect 115) (9) Where a Court with materials before it comes to the conclusion that a review which has been applied for is necessary to correct an evident error or omission or for the ends of justice and grants the application accordingly, the order so made is not open to be questioned on special appeal (10) nor is an order directing the parties to examine the persons who had sworn the affidavits on which the application for review was based as also to produce other evidence, being an interlocutory order neither granting nor rejecting the review appealable (11) That there is no sufficient reason for granting the review is no ground of appeal (12) No second appeal lies from an order granting an application for review (1) but it does from an original decretal order as amended on review (2) An appeal under this rule is not controlled by sect 104 sub sect (2) An appeal against an order granting a review would lie under sub rule (1) of this order even where no appeal would lie against the final decree disposing of the case (3)

Clause (b) — Appeals have been allowed where the Judge has not recorded his reason for granting an application for review, (4) or where he has granted a review without inquiry or proof that the new evidence was not within the knowledge of the applicant at the hearing or could not be adduced by him before the decree was passed, (5) or on the ground that by going through the evidence a second time the Judge might come to a different conclusion, (6) or merely to enable the case to be re argued (7) Upon an appeal it may be open to the Court of Appeal to say that the Judge ought not to have admitted a review (8) The clause does not refer to the weight or sufficiency of evidence and an Appellate Court cannot set aside an order of review merely because in its opinion the probative force of the evidence is insufficient to establish the allegations made in support of the application for review though such evidence had such probative force to the Court granting the review (9)

Clause (d) — This is the effect of the decisions cited (10) The object of placing a limitation on the time within which applications for review may be made is that the finality of a decision should be left in doubt no longer than the requisites of justice imperatively demand (11) Though an appeal lies in such cases an application under sect 15 of the High Court Charter Act does not necessarily lie (12) Unless the delay was accounted for (13) and the Court was satisfied as to there being good and sufficient cause for the delay the application for review ought to have been rejected (14) and the review and all subsequent proceedings under it are invalid (1) But if there be just and reasonable cause for the admission of the application for review even after two years, the High Court will not interfere under sect 15 of the Charter Act (2) It has been held that ignorance of the legal effect of the judgment is not a justification of delay, (3) nor ignorance on the part of legal advisers of the contents of a document, copy of which was in their possession at the time of the original hearing (4) nor that an application presented in time was refused as not properly stamped, (5) nor the omission of contentions and arguments which might have been adduced within proper time, (6) nor where the applicant was a minor till shortly before the making of the decree sought to be reviewed (7) or even till after it was made, (8) nor is the pendency of a special appeal (9) nor the pendency of an appeal dismissed on the ground of want of jurisdiction (10) The time occupied in the appeal should not be deducted (11) nor can the time occupied in prosecuting a prior application for review be deducted in calculating limitation (12) A new exposition of the law was held not to be a just and reasonable cause for not having presented the application for review within the prescribed time (13) When however, a suit was dismissed as wrongly framed, and the plaintiff brought a second suit in which the Full Bench held that the course taken in the first suit was the proper one the plaintiff was allowed a review in the first case though out of time that being a very different thing from interfering with previous decisions of the Court in other cases between other parties (14) The period of limitation is now prescribed by Art 173, Sched I, Division III, Limitation Act IX of 1908 Under the Code of 1859 it was governed by sect 377 of that Code, which fixed the period at ninety days

"Such objections may be taken"—The provision that objection can be taken by appeal against the order or on appeal against the final decree, has been held not to be controlled by sect 591 (now sect 105) (15) The fact that a party on the re-hearing of the case produced fresh evidence himself did not debar him on appeal from objecting on the same ground namely that the opposite party had not established that with due diligence he could not have for re-hearing make such order in regard to the re hearing as it thinks fit.

Registry of application granted, and order for re hearing—This rule corresponds with sect 380 of Act VIII of 1859 That section after the word "register" ran "of suits or appeals (as the case may be) and the Court shall give such order in regard to the re hearing of the suit as it may deem proper in the circumstances of the case" The present wording was adopted by sect 620 of Act X of 1877 There has been some diversity of decision on the question as to what may be gone into at the re hearing The Calcutta High Court formerly held that the applicant was only entitled to go into the points on which the rule granting the review was allowed and that matters not mentioned when the rule was argued could not be gone into (3) but later the same Court held it was discretionary with the Court to re hear the whole case or only the particular point on which the review was granted (4) The Bombay High Court has, however held that when a review has been admitted the whole case is reopened (5) And it has recently been held by the Calcutta High Court that the expression 'rehear the case' means 'rehear the whole case' and that if the case is to be reheard only upon special points the order must be made under the last words of the section which enable the Court to make such orders as it thinks fit (6) It has been held that where a case is admitted to review by the deciding Judge and is afterwards tried by another Judge the new Judge must try the point directed by the order of review (7) and that a Judge granting a review on one point has no power to go into or to decide a matter already decided finally and as to which no application for review was made (8) When a plaintiff obtained a review on the ground that he was entitled upon the allegations and proofs on the record to the full relief which he had sought, it was held not to be open to the defendant on the re-hearing to adduce evidence he ought to have done at the hearing (1) A Court should in its judgment on the re-hearing give reasons for coming to a different conclusion from that which it had previously formed (2) When a case is re-heard on review the order on the re-hearing is a new decree whatever the result is, (3) even though on the application for review coming on for re-hearing the Judge allowed it on a comparatively insignificant point and forthwith directed a clerical error in the decree to be rectified, and the time within which to appeal on the decree runs from the date of such order (4)

Practice—See notes to rr 1 and 4, ante

29. 9. No application to review an order made on an application for a review or a decree or order passed or made on a review shall be entertained

Review of review—With verbal alterations and a transposition this rule is the same as the last paragraph of sect 629 of the former Code. The first portion of the rule refers to the second, and the second portion refers to the third, stage of the proceedings through which an application for a review may pass (5). It has been a question whether these words are tantamount to saying "no second application for review shall be made," that is whether such an application is barred in all cases (6). As regards this, it is clear that if an application for review is allowed at the second stage, then the order allowing the application cannot, as being an order made on an application for review be itself reviewed. Similarly an order made in the third stage after the admission of the application for review and after the case has been re-heard, whether that order confirms or reverse the decree sought to be reviewed, is a new decree (7). There is here a decree or order as the case may be, passed or made upon a review, and this rule prohibits a further review (8). There remains a third case viz where the application for review is rejected at the first or second stage and the case is in consequence not re-heard. In this case the order itself rejecting the application for review cannot be reviewed. But the question then arises whether a second application for review of the original order or decree may be made on different grounds. For instance, does the rejection of an application based on the ground of alleged error apparent on the face of the record preclude a subsequent application based on the ground of the discovery of new evidence? It may be contended that this rule does not cover the case because on the facts stated the second application is not for a review of the order made on an application for review nor is it for a review of a decree or order passed or made on a review. On the other hand though the original order is directly attacked by such a subsequent application the effect of the latter if successful is to grant the review which though on different grounds was previously refused. It has been said (1) that the present provision was first inserted in the Code of 1877 to meet the decision of the Full Bench in Nasiruddin Khan v. Indro naryan Chowdhry (2) that the Court may admit a review even after a prior order rejecting it. On the other hand the Calcutta High Court has held (3) that though the order of rejection is final in the sense that it cannot be made the direct subject of review these provisions do not prohibit the admission of a subsequent application for review of the original decree on a different ground from that which was the basis of the previous application which was refused.

ORDER XLVIII.

Miscellaneous.

93.] 1. (1) Every process issued under this Code shall be served at the expense of the party on whose behalf it is issued, unless the Court otherwise directs.

(2) The court-fee chargeable for such service shall be paid within a time to be fixed before the process is issued.

Costs of service.

"Unless the Court otherwise directs"—In the matter of H O Studd (1) Rampini, J, said "This provision of the Civil Procedure Code does not appear to me to give a Court any power to depart from the rules of the High Court on the subject of the levy of process fees, or to remit those fees. The section relates to the payment of process fees by the parties to a suit, and gives the Court, acting judicially, power to make an order, between party and party only, as to who should pay the process fees. It does not expressly give power to remit the fees, or, what comes to the same thing to order that the process should be served free, or, in other words, at the expense of Government, and in the present case we cannot, I think make such an order under sect 93, C P C, seeing that the Government is no party to the suit." Ghose, J, however, declined to express any opinion upon the question "whether or not the Court has the power to relax in any case the process fee rules," and Rampini, J, himself pointed out that some Benches readily grant a relaxation of these rules.

Within a time to be fixed by the Court—If no time is fixed, there is no obligation to pay the court fee, and where processes could not be served on witnesses for non payment of the court fee, in such a case it was held that the suit could not be dismissed for default of evidence (2)

below, and the liabilities and claims attaching to the said property, so far as they have been ascertained, are those specified in the schedule against each lot.

In the absence of any order of postponement, the sale will be held by at the monthly sale commencing at o'clock on the s'

In the event, however, of the debt above specified and of the costs of the sale being tendered or paid before the knocking down of any lot, the sale will be stopped.

At the sale the public generally are invited to bid, either personally or by duly authorized agent. No bid by, or on behalf of, the judgment-creditors above mentioned, however, will be accepted, nor will any sale to them be valid without the express permission of the Court previously given. The following are the further

Conditions of Sale

1 The particulars specified in the schedule below have been stated to the best of the information of the Court, but the Court will not be answerable for any error, misstatement or omission in this proclamation.

2 The amount by which the biddings are to be increased shall be determined by the officer conducting the sale. In the event of any dispute arising as to the amount bid, or as to the bidder, the lot shall at once be again put up to auction.

3 The highest bidder shall be declared to be the purchaser of any lot, provided always that he is legally qualified to bid, and provided that it shall be in the discretion of the Court or officer holding the sale to decline acceptance of the highest bid when the price offered appears so clearly inadequate as to make it advisable to do so.

4 For reasons recorded, it shall be in the discretion of the officer conducting the sale to adjourn it, subject always to the provisions of rule 69 of Order XXI.

purchase money to the officer conducting the sale and in default of such deposit the property shall forthwith be put up again and re-sold.

7 The full amount of the purchase money shall be paid by the purchaser before the Court closes on the fifteenth day after the sale of the property, exclusive of such day or if the fifteenth day be a Sunday or other holiday, then on the first office day after the fifteenth day.

8 In default of payment of the balance of purchase money within the period allowed, the property shall be re-sold after the issue of a fresh notification of sale. The deposit, after defraying the expenses of the sale may if the Court thinks fit, be forfeited to Government and the defaulting purchaser shall forfeit all claim to the property or to any part of the sum for which it may be subsequently sold.

Order of reference on agreements to refer

17 (1) Where any persons agree in writing that any difference between them, shall be referred to arbitration, the parties to the agreement, or any of them, may apply to any Court having jurisdiction in the matter to which the agreement relates, that the agreement be filed in Court

(2) The application shall be in writing and shall be numbered and registered as a suit between one or more of the parties interested or claiming to be interested as plaintiff or plaintiffs, and the others or other of them as defendants or defendant, if the application has been presented by all the parties, or, if otherwise, between the applicant as plaintiff and the other parties as defendants

(3) On such application being made the Court shall direct notice thereof to be given to all the parties to the agreement, other than the applicants, requiring such parties to show cause, within the time specified in the notice, why the agreement should not be filed

(4) Where no sufficient cause is shown, the Court shall order the agreement to be filed, and shall make an order of reference to the arbitrator appointed in accordance with the provisions of the agreement or, if there is no such provision and the parties cannot agree, the Court may appoint an arbitrator

THE THIRD SCHEDULE

EXECUTION OF DECREES BY COLLECTORS.

1. Where the execution of a decree has been transferred to the Collector under section 68, he may— [s 321]
Powers of Collector
(a) proceed as the Court would proceed when the sale of immoveable property is postponed in order to enable the judgment debtor to raise the amount of the decree, or
(b) raise the amount of the decree by letting in perpetuity, or for a term, on payment of a premium, or by mortgaging, the whole or any part of the property ordered to be sold, or
(c) sell the property ordered to be sold or so much thereof as may be necessary

This schedule deals with the functions of the Collector as the authority invested with jurisdiction to see that the decree is satisfied. The authority is given for the purpose of enabling him to determine the best mode of satisfying the decree. But his discretion does not extend to any jurisdiction to determine whether the decree has been satisfied or not (1)

2. Where the execution of a decree, not being a decree ordering the sale of immoveable property in pursuance of a contract specifically affecting the same, but being a decree for the payment of money in satisfaction of which the Court has ordered the sale of immoveable property, has been so transferred, the Collector, if, after such inquiry as he thinks necessary, he has reason to believe that all the liabilities of the judgment debtor can be discharged without a sale of the whole of his available immoveable property, may proceed as hereinafter provided [s 322]

THE THIRD SCHEDULE

EXECUTION OF DECREES BY COLLECTORS.

1. Where the execution of a decree has been transferred [s 321] to the Collector under section 68, he may—
- Powers of Collector.
- (a) proceed as the Court would proceed when the sale of immoveable property is postponed in order to enable the judgment debtor to raise the amount of the decree; or
 - (b) raise the amount of the decree by letting in perpetuity, or for a term, on payment of a premium, or by mortgaging, the whole or any part of the property ordered to be sold, or
 - (c) sell the property ordered to be sold or so much thereof as may be necessary.

This schedule deals with the functions of the Collector as the authority invested with jurisdiction to see that the decree is satisfied. The authority is given for the purpose of enabling him to determine the best mode of satisfying the decree. But his discretion does not extend to any jurisdiction to determine whether the decree has been satisfied or not (1)

- 2 Where the execution of a decree, not being a decree [s 322] ordering the sale of immoveable property in pursuance of a contract specifically affecting the same, but being a decree for the payment of money in satisfaction of which the Court has ordered the sale of immoveable property, has been so transferred, the Collector, if, after such inquiry as he thinks necessary, he has reason to believe that all the liabilities of the judgment-debtor can be discharged without a sale of the whole of his available immoveable property, may proceed as hereinafter provided
- Procedure of Collector in special cases

"Powers"—The Collector, it has been held, is limited to one or other of the courses specifically mentioned in the section (2)

(1) Blurchand v Vira, 14 Bom. L. R. 757 (1912), 37 B 32

(2) Madhavji Karandkar v Hari Chikne, 7 B 332 (1953)

[s. 322A.]

3. (1) In any such case as is referred to in paragraph 2, the Collector shall publish a notice, allowing a period of sixty days from the date of its publication for compliance and calling upon—

Notice to be given to decree-holders and to persons having claims on property.

(a) every person holding a decree for the payment of money against the judgment-debtor capable of execution by sale of his immoveable property and which such decree-holder desires to have so executed, and every holder of a decree for the payment of money in execution of which proceedings for the sale of such property are pending, to produce before the Collector a copy of the decree, and a certificate from the Court which passed or is executing the same, declaring the amount recoverable thereunder;

(b) every person having any claim on the said property to submit to the Collector a statement of such claim, and to produce the documents (if any) by which it is evidenced.

(2) Such notice shall be published by being affixed on a conspicuous part of the court-house of the Court which made the original order for sale, and in such other places (if any) as the Collector thinks fit; and where the address of any such decree-holder or claimant is known, a copy of the notice shall be sent to him by post or otherwise.

4. (1) Upon the expiration of the said period, the Collector shall appoint a day for hearing any representations which the judgment-debtor and the decree-holders or claimants (if any) may desire to make, and for holding such inquiry as he may deem necessary for informing himself as to the nature and extent of such decrees and claims and of the judgment-debtor's immoveable property, and may, from time to time, adjourn such hearing and inquiry.

Amount of decrees for payment of money to be ascertained, and immoveable property available for their satisfaction.

(2) Where there is no dispute as to the fact or extent of the liability of the judgment-debtor to any of the decrees or claims of which the Collector is informed, or as to the relative priorities of such decrees or claims, or as to the liability of any such property for the satisfaction of such decrees or claims, the Collector shall draw up a statement, specifying the amount to be recovered for the discharge of such decrees, the order in which such decrees and claims are to be satisfied, and the immoveable property available for that purpose.

(3) Where any such dispute arises, the Collector shall refer the same, with a statement thereof and his own opinion thereon, to the Court which made the original order for sale, and shall, pending the reference, stay proceedings relating to the subject thereof. The Court shall dispose of the dispute if the matter thereof is within its jurisdiction, or transmit the case to a competent Court for disposal, and the final decision shall be communicated to the Collector, who shall then draw up a statement as above provided in accordance with such decision.

Amount of decrees to be ascertained and property available for their satisfaction—It was held that the assignees of a decree for money obtained against a person whose property had been taken over by the Collector under sect 326, Act X of 1877, whilst such property was under the management of the Collector, were not entitled to be placed on the list of creditors prepared by the Collector under sect 322b of the last Code. An application to be placed on the said list of creditors should be made to the Collector and not to the District Judge (1). An appeal from a decision under this section by which a disputed claim is settled, has, in Madras, been treated as a miscellaneous appeal, i.e. an appeal from a decree not passed in a regular suit (2).

5 The Collector may, instead of himself issuing the notices [s 322c]
and holding the inquiry required by para
* Where District Court may issue notices and hold inquiry. graphs 3 and 4, draw up a statement specifying the circumstances of the judgment debtor and of his immoveable property so far as they are known to the Collector or appear in the records of his office, and forward such statement to the District Court, and such Court shall thereupon issue the notices, hold the inquiry and draw up the statement required by paragraphs 3 and 4 and transmit such statement to the Collector.

Issue of notice and inquiry by District Court—Under the Bengal North West Provinces and Assam Civil Courts Act 1887 the High Court has power to authorize Subordinate Judges and Munsiffs to take cognizance of references by Collectors under sect 322c of the former Code (Act XII of 1887 sect 23 (2) (c)).

6 The decision by the Court of any dispute arising under [s 322d]
Effect of decision of Court as to dispute paragraph 4 or paragraph 5 shall as between the parties thereto, have the force of and be appealable as a decree.

- (1) Murari Das v Collector of Chhargur referred to in Narayan v Bhagwant 10 L. J. 313 (1890) also from Almad Khan v Malho "A. C." (1890)

Effect of decision —As to the nature of the appeal and the Court fee duty payable, see the cases cited in the notes to paragraph 4

323 } 7 (1) Where the amount to be recovered and the property available have been determined as provided in paragraph 4 or paragraph 5, the Collector may,—

Scheme for liquidation of decrees for payment of money

- (a) if it appears that the amount cannot be recovered without the sale of the whole of the property available, proceed to sell such property, or,
- (b) if it appears that the amount with interest (if any) in accordance with the decree, and, when not decreed, with interest (if any) at such rate as he thinks reasonable, may be recovered without such sale, raise such amount and interest (notwithstanding the original order for sale)—
 - (i) by letting in perpetuity or for a term, on payment of a premium, the whole or any part of the said property, or
 - (ii) by mortgaging the whole or any part of such property, or
 - (iii) by selling part of such property, or
 - (iv) by letting on farm, or managing by himself or another, the whole or any part of such property for any term not exceeding twenty years from the date of the order of sale, or
 - (v) partly by one of such modes, and partly by another or others of such modes
- (2) For the purpose of managing the whole or any part of such property, the Collector may exercise all the powers of its owner
- (3) For the purpose of improving the saleable value of the property available or any part thereof, or rendering it more suitable for letting or managing, or for preserving the property from sale in satisfaction of an incumbrance, the Collector may discharge the claim of any incumbrancer which has become payable or compound the claim of any incumbrancer whether it has become payable or not and, for the purpose of providing funds to effect such discharge or composition may mortgage, let or sell any portion of the property, which he deems sufficient. If any dispute arises as to the amount due on any incumbrance with which the Collector proposes to deal under this clause, he may institute a suit in the proper Court, either in his own name or the name of the judgment-debtor, to have an account taken, or he may agree to refer such dispute to the decision of two arbitrators, one to be chosen by each party, or of an umpire to be named by such arbitrators.

- (4) In proceeding under this paragraph the Collector shall be subject to such rules consistent with this Act as may, from time to time, be made in this behalf by the Local Government

Liquidation of money decree—With regard to the rules referred to in last paragraph, see N W P list of Local Rules and Orders, ed 1894, p 112, Burmah Rules Manual ed 1897, p 114, Central Provinces List of Local Rules and Orders, ed 1896, p 45 (1) In the case of the Central Provinces the notifications are also issued under sect 320 of the last Code. As for interest to be taken into account, see Burchand v Vira, 14 Bom L R 787 (1912), 37 B 32. It has been held that the powers here conferred on the Collector and those conferred on the Talukdari Settlement officers by sect 3 of the Bombay Talukdari Settlement Act are both enabling and are not necessarily contradictory (2)

8 Where, on the expiration of the letting or management under paragraph ~ the amount to be recovered has not been realized, the Collector shall notify the fact in writing to the judgment-debtor or his representative in interest, stating at the same time that, if the balance necessary to make up the said amount is not paid to the Collector within six weeks from the date of such notice, he will proceed to sell the whole or a part of the said property, and, if on the expiration of such six weeks the said balance is not so paid, the Collector may sell the property or part accordingly

9 (1) The Collector shall, from time to time, render accounts to Court the Court which made the sale an account of all his hands and of all charges incurred in the execution and performance of the powers and duties imposed on him under the provisions of this Section balance at the disposal of the Court

(2) Such charges shall include any amount from time to time due to the Government or any part thereof, the rent (if any) superior holder in respect of such property or part, and, if the Collector so directs, the expenses of any witnesses summoned by him.

(3) The balance shall be applied by the Court—

(a) in providing for the maintenance of such members of the judgment-debtor's family (if any) as are entitled to be maintained out of the income of the property, to such amount in the case of each member as the Court thinks fit; and

(b) where the Collector has proceeded under paragraph 1, in satisfaction of the original decree in execution of which the Court ordered the sale of immoveable property, or otherwise as the Court may under section 73 direct; or

(c) where the Collector has proceeded under paragraph 2,—

(i) in keeping down the interest on incumbrances on the property;

(ii) where the judgment-debtor has no other sufficient means of subsistence, in providing for his subsistence to such amount as the Court thinks fit; and

(iii) in discharging rateably the claims of the original decree-holder and any other decree-holders who have complied with the said notice, and whose claims were included in the amount ordered to be recovered.

(4) No other holder of a decree for the payment of money shall be entitled to be paid out of such property or balance until the decree-holders who have obtained such order have been satisfied, and the residue (if any) shall be paid to the judgment-debtor or such other person as the Court directs.

tative and prosecution of remedies by decree-holders

in respect of the judgment debtor's immovable property or any part thereof any of the powers or duties conferred or imposed on him by paragraphs 1 to 10 the judgment debtor or his representative in interest shall be incompetent to mortgage charge lease or alienate such property or part except with the written permission of the Collector, nor shall any Civil Court issue any process against such property or part in execution of a decree for the payment of money

(2) During the same period no Civil Court shall issue any process of execution either against the judgment debtor or his property in respect of any decree for the satisfaction whereof provision has been made by the Collector under paragraph 7

(3) The same period shall be excluded in calculating the period of limitation applicable to the execution of any decree affected by the provisions of this paragraph in respect of any remedy of which the decree holder has been temporarily deprived

Object of section.—As to the object of this section and the exclusion from computation of the time during which the property is under the management of the Collector see case noted below (1)

(b) In the charge of an officer of the Court, if a suitable place for its safe custody be provided and the remuneration of the officer for a period of 15 days at such rate as may from time to time be fixed by the High Court be paid in advance.

(2) Whenever an attachment made under the provisions of this rule ceases for any of the reasons specified in rule 55 or rule 57 or rule 60 of this order, the Court may order the restitution of the attached property to the person in whose possession it was before attachment.

43A. (1) Whenever attached property is kept in the village or place where it is attached, the attaching officer shall forthwith report the fact to the Court and shall with his report forward a list of the property seized.

(2) If attached property is not sold under the first proviso to rule 43 or retained in the village or place where it is attached under the second proviso to that rule, it shall be brought to the Court house and delivered to the proper officer of the Court

43B. (1) Whenever attached property kept in the village or place where it is attached is live stock, the person at whose instance it is so retained shall provide for its maintenance, and, if he fails to do so and if it is in charge of an officer of the Court it shall be removed to the Court house.

Nothing in this rule shall prevent the judgment debtor or any person claiming to be interested in such stock from making such arrangements for feeding the same as may not be inconsistent with its safe custody.

(2) The Court may direct that any sums which have been expended by the attaching officer or are payable to him if not duly deposited or paid, be recovered from the proceeds of property, if sold, or be paid by the person declared entitled to delivery before he receives the same. The Court may also order that any sums deposited or paid under these rules be recovered as costs of the attachment from any party to the proceedings. Order 1.

(22) 31. An application for the issue of a summons for a party or a witness shall be made in the form prescribed for the purpose. No other forms shall be received by the Court.

rule 4 (f), mark such document with serial figures in the case of documents admitted as evidence for a plaintiff, and with serial letters in the case of documents admitted as evidence for a defendant, and shall initial every such serial number or letter. When there are two or more parties defendants, the documents of the first party defendant may be marked A1, B1, C1, &c., AA1, BB1, &c., and those of the second A2, B2, C2, &c., AA2, BB2, &c. When a number of documents of the same nature is admitted, as for example a series of receipts for rent, the whole series shall bear one figure or capital letter or letters and a small figure or small letter shall be added to distinguish each paper of the series.

Order XVI

22. (1) Save as provided in this rule and in rule 2, the court shall allow travelling and other expenses on the following scale—

- (a) In the case of witnesses of the class of cultivators, labourers, and menials, six annas a day,
 - (b) in the case of witnesses of a better class, such as zamindars, traders, pleaders, and persons of corresponding rank, from eight annas to two rupees a day, as the Court may direct; and
 - (c) in the case of witnesses of superior rank, including officers of Government in receipt of a salary of not less than Rs 200 a month, from three to five rupees a day.
- (2) If a witness demand any sum in excess of what has been paid to him, such sum shall be allowed if he satisfy the court that he has actually and necessarily incurred the additional expense.

ILLUSTRATION

A post office employé summoned to give evidence is entitled to demand from the party, on whose behalf or at whose instance he is summoned, the travelling and other expenses allowed to witnesses of the class or rank to which he belongs and in addition the sum for which he is liable as payment to the substitute officiating during his absence from duty. The sum so payable in respect of the substitute will be certified by the official superior of the witness on a slip which the witness will present to the court from which the summons issued.

(3) If a witness be detained for a longer period than one day the expenses of his detention shall be allowed at such rate, not usually exceeding that payable under clause (f) of this rule, as may seem to the court to be reasonable and proper.

Provided that the court may, for reasons stated in writing, allow expenses on a higher scale than that hereinbefore prescribed.

Order XIX

4. Affidavits shall be entitled In the court of _____ at _____ (naming such court). If the affidavit be in support of, or in opposition to, an application respecting any case in the court, it shall also be entitled in such case. If there be no such case it shall be entitled In the matter of the petition of

5. Affidavits shall be divided into paragraphs and every paragraph shall be numbered consecutively and, as nearly as may be, shall be confined to a distinct portion of the subject.

6. Every person making any affidavit shall be described therein in such manner as shall serve to identify him clearly, and where necessary for this purpose, it shall contain the full name, the name of his father, of his caste or religious persuasion, his rank or degree in life, his profession, calling, occupation or trade, and the true place of his residence.

or order is at variance with the judgment or contains some clerical or arithmetical error. Such objection shall state clearly what is the error, defect, or variance alleged, and shall be signed and dated by the person making it.

(2) If any such objection be filed on or before the date specified in the notice, the Munsarim shall enter the case in the earliest weekly list practicable, and shall, on the date fixed, put up the objection together with the record before the Judge who pronounced the judgment, or, if such Judge has ceased to be the Judge of the court, before the Judge then presiding. [77(2)]

(3) If no objection has been filed on or before the date specified in the notice, or if an objection has been filed and disallowed, the Munsarim shall date the decree as of the day on which the judgment was pronounced and shall lay it before the Judge for signature in accordance with the provisions of rules 7 and 8. [77(3)]

(4) If an objection has been duly filed and has been allowed, the correction or alteration directed by the Judge shall be made. Every such correction or alteration in the judgment shall be made by the Judge in his own handwriting. A decree amended in accordance with the correction or alteration directed by the Judge shall be drawn up, and the Munsarim shall date the decree as of the day on which the judgment was pronounced and shall lay it before the Judge for signature in accordance with the provisions of rules 7 and 8. [77(4)]

(5) When the Judge signs the decree he shall make an autograph note stating the date on which the decree was signed. [77(5)]

Order XXI

101. When the certificate prescribed by section 41 is received by the court which sent the decree for execution, it shall cause the necessary details as to the result of execution to be entered in its register of civil suits before the papers are transmitted to the record room. [32, para 2]

105. Every attachment of moveable property under rule 43, of Negotiable Instruments under rule 51, and of immoveable property under rule 54, shall be made through a Civil Court Amra, or bailiff unless special reasons render it necessary that any other agency should be employed, in which case those reasons shall be stated in the hand writing of the presiding Judge himself in the order for attachment. [33]

106. When the property which it is sought to bring to sale is immoveable property within the definition of the same contained in the law for the time being in force relating to the registration of documents, and the decree is not sent to the Collector for execution under section 68, the court, before ordering a sale shall call upon the Sub Registrar within whose sub-district such property is situate to search his registers and report as to what encumbrances, if any, it appears from the registers to be liable. [33 para 1]

*107. Where an application is made for the sale of land or of any interest in land, the court shall before ordering sale thereof, call upon the parties to state whether such land is or is not ancestral land within the meaning of Notification No. 1887/I—238-10, dated 7th October, 1911, of the Local Government, and shall fix a date for determining the said question.

On the day so fixed, or on any date to which the enquiry may have been adjourned, the court may take such evidence, by affidavit or otherwise, as it may deem necessary, and may also call for a report from the Collector of the district as to whether such land or any portion thereof is ancestral land.

After considering the evidence and the report, if any, the court shall determine whether such land, or any, and what part of it, is ancestral land.

The result of the enquiry shall be noted in an order made for the purpose by the presiding Judge in his own handwriting.

108. When the property which it is sought to bring to sale is revenue paying or revenue free land or any interest in such land, and the decree is not sent to the Collector for execution under section 69, the Court, before ordering a sale, shall also call upon the Collector in whose district such property is situate to report whether the property is subject to any (and, if so, to what) outstanding claims on the part of Government. [32, para 2]

[103 para 1] 109. The reports of the Sub Registrar and Collector shall be open to the inspection of the parties or their pleaders, free of charge between the time of the receipt by the court and the declaration of the result of the enquiry

No fees are payable in respect of search and report by the Sub Registrar and Collector

[104 para 2] 110 The result of the enquiry under rule 66 shall be noted in an order made for the purpose by the presiding Judge in his own handwriting The court may in its discretion adjourn the inquiry, provided that the reasons for the adjournment are stated in writing, and that no more adjournments are made than are necessary for the purposes of the inquiry

[105] 111 If after proclamation of the intended sale has been made any matter is brought to the notice of the court which it considers material for purchasers to know the court shall cause the same to be notified to intending purchasers when the property is put up for sale

CHIEF COURT, PUNJAB.

THE PUNJAB GAZETTE,

1909 PART III, p 2

Notification No 6 G, dated 1 1 09.

In accordance with the provisions of Section 23 of Act X, 1897, the General Clauses Act, the following draft rules made under section 122 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, by the Hon'ble the Chief Court of the Punjab to regulate its own procedure and the procedure of the civil courts subject to its superintendence, are published for the information of persons likely to be affected thereby. Notice is hereby given that the draft rules will be taken into consideration by the Hon'ble Judges of the Chief Court on or after the 31st day of January, 1909. Any objections or suggestions which may be made to the draft rules should reach the Registrar of the Chief Court by that date.

After rule 7 of Order II, insert:—

" 8 (1) Where an objection, duly taken, has been allowed by the Court, the plaintiff shall be permitted to select the cause of action with which he will proceed and shall, within a time to be fixed by the Court, amend the plaint by striking out the remaining causes of action.

(2) When the plaintiff has selected the cause of action with which he will proceed, the Court shall pass an order giving him time within which to submit amended plaint for the remaining causes of action and for making up the Court-fees that may be necessary. Should the plaintiff not comply with the Court's order the Court shall proceed as provided in rule 18 of Order VI and as required by the provisions of the Court-fees Act."

To rule 10 of Order V, the following proviso should be added —

" Provided that in any case if the plaintiff so wishes the Court may attempt to serve the summons in the first instances by registered post instead of in the mode of service laid down in this rule, and provided always that should the defendant not appear in answer to the summons so issued, the Court shall have service effected in accordance with the provisions of this Order."

In the second paragraph of rule 2 of Order VII, after the words "and the defendant" insert "or for moveables in the possession of the defendant, or for debts of which the value he cannot, after the exercise of reasonable diligence, estimate", after the words "the amount" insert "or value."

Order IX, rule 9 (1):—To rule 9 (1) the following proviso should be added:—

" Provided that the plaintiff should not be precluded from bringing another suit for redemption of a mortgage, although a former suit may have been dismissed for default."

Order XXI, rule 29.—After rule 29 of Order XXI the following rule should be inserted:—

" 29A. When a suit under rule 63 of this Order is pending, the Court in which such suit is filed may, if it considers that execution of the former decree should be stayed, intimate the fact to the executing court, which shall thereupon stay execution until the suit is decided."

In Order XXI, rule 75, after the word "stored" shall be added the words "or can be sold to greater advantage in an unripe state, such as green wheat or gram."

Order XXX, rule 1.—To rule I of Order XXX the following explanation shall be added —

Explanation —" This rule applies to a joint Hindu family trading partnership."

Order XXXII, rule 1.—To rule 1 the following paragraph shall be added:—

" Such person may be ordered to pay any costs in the suit as if he were the plaintiff."

A copy of such notice shall also, if possible, be served on the judgment-debtor. When at the hearing of such notice the third party shows no cause, and admits the debt to be due the Court may intimate to him that he should pay into Court the amount admitted by him to be due, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to satisfy the decree and that if he fails to do so, he may be subjected to a suit.

"57A A judgment debtor may secure release of his attached property by giving security to the value thereof to the Court.

In Order XXI the following shall be substituted for Rule 65.—

'63 (1) Sales shall be conducted by the Bailiff or Deputy Bailiff, but the duty may be entrusted to a process server when the property is moveable property not exceeding Rs 50 in value, and when in the opinion of the Court, for reasons recorded in the diary of the process, the Bailiff or Deputy Bailiff cannot personally conduct the sale.

"(2) Subject to the terms of the proviso to Rule 43 and of Rule 74, some one day in each week shall be set apart and regularly observed for holding sales in execution of decree, and some well known place in the vicinity of the Court house or the public bazaar shall be selected for the purpose.

"(3) Subject as aforesaid, and unless the Court is of opinion that for any special reason a sale on the spot where the property is attached or situated will be more beneficial to the judgment debtor, all property, whether moveable or immoveable, attached in of sale, and paid to the officer conducting the sale under the orders of the Court as his authorized commission—

When the proceeds of sale do not exceed Rs.500—5 per cent

Where they exceed Rs 500 and do not exceed Rs 5000—5 per cent on the first Rs 500 and 2 per cent on the remainder

Where they exceed Rs 5000—at the above rate on the first Rs 5000 and one per cent on the remainder

If a temporary peon is employed for the custody of the attached property, the process server shall state in his report of the attachment the name of the temporary peon employed and the date from which his duties commenced.

attachment after that date unless further fees are paid before that date. The payment of any such further amount shall immediately be certified to the Court Clerk by the Bailiff in Form 15A of Appendix E.

If the further fees required are not paid, the attachment shall cease as soon as the period for which fees have already been paid expires. In such a case the amount paid prior to the cessation of the attachment shall not be allowed to the attaching decree-holder as costs.

(4) The payment of fees under sub rule (1) shall be made in cash to the Bailiff and the amount shall be at once entered in Bailiff's Register No. 11. The Court Clerk shall on receipt of the Bailiff's acknowledgment (Form 15A) file it in the record and make an entry to that effect in the diary.

(5) Temporary peons employed for the custody of attached property shall be peons but if the services of the former are utilized, the fees paid shall be credited direct into the Treasury to "Process servers' Fees" ("XVI-A, Law and Justice"—"Courts of Law"—"Court Fees realized in cash")

(6) The remuneration of temporary peons employed to take charge of attached property shall be paid direct by the Bailiff to them on the order of the Judge.

Before passing such order, the Judge must verify the name of the payee from the report of the attachment and must satisfy himself that the amount proposed to be paid amount that is chargeable for peons including the amount of the last payment, he shall direct that the excess be refunded to the payer is in the hands of the Bailiff that officer shall make the refund in the ordinary way prescribed in his Register II for repayments. If the amount has been credited into the Treasury, he shall prepare a bill for the amount to be refunded in the prescribed treasury form and shall lay it before the Judge for signature with the record of the case in the same way as a bill for the remuneration of temporary peons. Before signing the refund order, the Judge must satisfy himself that the amount is available for refund by examining Bailiff's Register I and the record. The bill when signed by the Judge will be given to the payee, with instructions to present it for payment at the Treasury or sub treasury.

For Rule 45B substitute the following:—

"45B (1) In addition to the fees payable before a warrant issues for the attachment of moveable property under Rule 45A, the Bailiff shall require the attaching decree holder to deposit a sum of money sufficient to cover the cost of attachment other than the pay of peons employed to take charge of it for such period as the Bailiff may think fit.

Explanation—The costs in question might be for example (a) Rent of building in which to store attached furniture (b) Cost of conveying the attached property from the place of attachment to Court or to a secure place of custody, (c) Cost of feeding and tending live stock. (1) Cost of proceeding to the place of attachment to sell perishable property.

spelling to be corrected unless the advocate concerned shows any good reason to the contrary

If the name was incorrectly spelled in the Lower Court it should nevertheless be correctly spelled in the Chief Court, the name as previously incorrectly spelled being added in brackets, if necessary, to prevent confusion. The same rule shall be applied as far as practicable to names of natives of India. But any person who writes English has the right to spell his own name in any way he likes, and the spelling of his ordinary signature should be adopted in all documents in Court.

47 No correspondence relating to cases before the Court can be attended to, but any person having business in the Court or its office shall transact the same in person or by a duly authorized agent, advocate or pleader.

48 The Registrar, Deputy Registrars, Assistant Registrars and the Senior Interpreters attached to the Chief Court for Burmese, Hindustani, Gujarati, Chinese, Tamil and Telugu, are empowered to administer the oath to deponents of affidavits to be filed in the Chief Court.

The Senior Interpreters shall exercise the power conferred by this rule only within the precincts of the Court.

49 The Chief Clerk shall certify the copies referred to in Order XLI, Rule 37.

Appeals to the Privy Council

50 Petitions for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council shall be presented to the Assistant Registrar who, if the petition is in order, will issue notice in the form attached on the respondent to show cause before a Bench consisting of at least two Judges (see Rule 24 above) why the certificate prayed for should not be granted.

51 When a certificate is granted, the appellant shall, within the period prescribed by Order XLV, Rule 7, give security for the costs of the respondent to the extent of Rs 4,000. In cases of special magnitude and importance, the Court may require security for a larger sum, provided that security shall not in any case be required for a sum exceeding Rs 10,000.

52 Security shall be furnished either by the deposit of cash or Government securities to the amount required or subject to the provisions of Rule 54 by a first mortgage of immoveable property. Cash deposited under this rule shall be paid to the Bailiff of the Court. Government securities so deposited shall be made over to the Registrar or a Deputy Registrar.

53 When cash or Government securities are deposited under Rule 52 a security bond shall be executed in Form A or Form B attached, as the case may be.

54 If a charge on immoveable property is tendered as security, the appellant shall file a draft mortgage bond together with a valuation of the property verified by affidavit. The value of the property shall be at least double the amount of the security required, and in the case of land on which there are buildings which are brought into the valuation of the property, or where a mortgage of buildings only is tendered, the buildings must be insured.

55 On tender of a charge on immoveable property as security, notice of the tender shall be given to the opposite party requiring him to show cause, if he wishes to do so within a time to be fixed by the Court, why the security tendered should not be accepted.

56 If the security tendered appears to the Court to be unsatisfactory, the appellant shall be so informed.

57 In every security bond, the appellant shall bind himself to pay such costs of the opposite party as may be allowed by the Court in the event of the appeal not being prosecuted.

58 Within the period prescribed by Order XLV, Rule 7, the appellant shall also deposit with the Bailiff of the Court the sum of Rs 1,000 or such sum as the Assistant Registrar may determine to defray the expenses of printing, translating, transcribing, indexing and transmitting a copy of the record.

59 If the appellant shall fail within the time prescribed to furnish security for costs, or to deposit the amount required for the preparation of the transcript record in accordance with Rules 51 and 58 the proceedings shall be placed before the Court for disposal.

60 When the Court admits the appeal, it shall always clearly state in its order who are the actual parties at the time of admission.

which have not within the time specified, been expressly asked for by the parties. The Assistant Registrar shall also on payment to him of a fee of Rs. 16 furnish to the parties a list of the papers, which make up the record; and shall require each party within fourteen days to indicate any paper which he considers immaterial. If the parties are agreed as to the papers to be omitted, those papers shall not be transcribed. If the Assistant Registrar thinks that any paper, as to the omission of which the parties are not agreed, should be omitted, he shall refer the matter for the determination of the Court. Where it is decided to include any paper against the wish of any party, the transcript shall show clearly that the inclusion of the paper was objected to by that party.

62. The Assistant Registrar shall arrange the papers in the transcript in the order specified below and shall prefix an index to the transcript. He shall also attach to the index a certified list of all papers omitted from the transcript under Rule 61.—

- (i) The form known as Donny Quarto (i.e., 54 cms in length and 42 in width) shall be followed
 - (ii) The size of the paper used shall be such that the sheet, when folded and trimmed shall be 11 inches in length and 8½ inches in width

(iii) The type to be used in the text shall be Pica type but Long Primer shall be used in printing accounts, tabular matter and notes

(iv) The number of lines in each page of Pica type shall be 47 or thereabouts, and every tenth line shall be numbered in the margin

66. When the record is printed in India, 100 copies of the transcript shall be struck off. Twenty copies shall be supplied to the party at whose cost the record is printed. Any other party to the suit shall be supplied with copies of the record on payment of the cost price. Copies so supplied shall not be certified. A charge of Re 1 for every 750 words shall be made for proof reading. Money paid for proof reading shall be paid to Government.

When the record is ready, if it is to be printed in England, one certified copy shall be sent to His Majesty's Privy Council, Whitehall, at the same time as the record is printed in India, and 100 copies shall be sent to the Registrar of the Court.

The Registrar shall correct by the Registrar or initialing, every eighth page thereof.

Where part of the record is printed in India and part is to be printed in England respectively, the rule shall, as far as practicable, apply to such parts as are printed in India and the parts as are to be printed in England respectively.

68. All costs incurred in British India whether allowed by the Court under Rule 57 or otherwise, shall be recoverable, as if they were the amount of a decree for money.
